

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

S I R,

I HAVE often thought, that most of the Mischiefs under which Mankind suffers, and almost all their polemick Disputes are owing to the Abuse of Words.

If Men would define what they mean by the Sounds they make use of to express their Thoughts, and then keep to those Definitions, that is, annex always the same Ideas to the same Sounds, most of the Disputes in the World would be at an End; but this would not answer the Purposes of those who derive Power and Wealth from imposing upon the Ignorance and Credulity of others: And therefore, till the World can agree to be honest, and to buy and sell by the same Measure, (which they don't seem in Haste to do) I doubt this Evil is likely to go on.

There are no Words in Language which seem to me to be more misapply'd than the Word Self-Interest, by Divines, Orators, Philosophers, or Poets: All have exerted themselves with great Efforts of Exhortation, Reason, Eloquence, and Wit, against this reigning Vice; but, I conceive, they have all miss'd the Mark. Indeed, in the larger Sense of the Word, I think it is impossible for any Man to act upon any other Motive than his own Interest: For every Pursuit we make, must have for its End the Gratification of some Appetite, or the avoiding of some Evil we fear; and, in truth, when we say that any Man is self-interested, we mean only that he is not enough in his own Interest.

A good-humour'd Man, when he pities another, gratifies a natural Passion, in having a Fellow-feeling of the Calamities of others, and a Desire to see all Men out of Pain or Trouble. A generous Man pleases his Vanity, Ostentation, or Temper, in doing good to others, or intends to gain Friends or Dependants. An indulgent Parent takes Pleasure to see that his Children (whom he esteems Parts of himself) live happy, contented, and make a Figure in the World, and derives Credit and Reputation to himself from their doing so. And a beneficent Patron, or a Man in Love, reaps great personal Satisfaction in obliging the Objects of his Kindness, and by making them more devoted to himself: And all these pity or condemn one who wants these agreeable ble Appetites, and most reasonably judge, that he wants many Pleasures which they themselves enjoy ; as well knowing, that, next to the Preservation of their Beings by wholesome Food and warm Raiment, and the enjoying the common Necessaries and usual Diversions of Life, all that can be added to their Happiness, is to obtain Respect, Love, and Esteem from others.

Even all the worst Passions flow from the same Source. For what is Hatred, Malice, and Revenge, but gratifying vitious Appetites? And Fear and Cowardice are only Struggles in Nature to avoid Evils to our selves. Of all Men, the covetous Man is the most unhappy : For as every Pleasure is the Gratification of some Appetite or Desire, the Man who has least Desires and Appetites, must have the least Pleasures, and he must lose many agreeable Sensations which other Men enjoy. I laugh at the foolish Philosophy of some Sects in old Greece, who plac'd the Summum Bonum, or chief Happiness, in the Absence of all Passions or Desires ; which can be only a State of Death, or perfect Stupidity, whilst we are alive. Men exceed Vegetables no otherwise than as they think ; and when they cease to think, (if that can be) they are in a temporary State of Death ; and the Objects of all Thinking must be something we desire to attain, or fear to lose : And as Thought it self is only a Motion of the Mind, so one Motion must produce another, as every Thought must do, and be perpetually progressive, till Death puts an End to all Thoughts. Here Covesciousness therefore can only proceed from a Poorness and Dejection of Soul, which always fears Want and Misery, and must ever be bereft of all lively and sparkling Imaginations, be in a constant State of Diffidence and Despondency, and lose all the gay, chearful, and generous Sensations which flow from a free, active, happy, and beneficent Mind.

I must take the Liberty therefore to think, that the Word Self-Interest, in the ill Sense of the Word, ought to be new defin'd, and be made applicable only to those who prefer a small Interest to a great one, or to such who take a wrong Way to attain that great one: And in this latter Sense the Bigot is the most self-interested Person in the World: His whole Thoughts are so wound up in himself, and his own personal Views, that he is wholly regardless of what becomes of the rest of the World, unless he can find his own Benefit in it. Indeed he will give some loose Pence to Beggars, or Vagabonds, and perhaps Sums to maintain Idlers and Cynicks, not out of Humanity and generous Principles, but in order to put it out to large Interest, I do not mean for Five or Six per Cent. but for more than sixty Times sixty Thousand; though if a Nation is to be saved, or a great People protected from Slavery, he is wholly unconcern'd about the Event, as esteeming the little Affairs of this World much below his Notice and Consideration.

He is the same in respect of the other World, as the covetous Man is in respect of this, and both their good Qualities proceed from

from the same Principles and Appetites in Nature. He is covetous for the good Things in the Kingdom of Heaven, as the other is for them here ; and both take much the same Way to get them. They both condemn wise Men, because wise Men condemn them : Their despising the Vanities of the World saves Money ; their condemning the modest Pleasures of Life gratifies their sour and censorious Tempers ; their living cloister'd, and retir'd Lives, feed natural Melancholly ; and the former Hopes to carry Heaven (which the other does not Trouble himself about) by singing Songs upon Earth, by being perfectly useless to Society, and good for no one Thing in the World.

This Sort of Creature is the Tool for Knaves to work with, and made use of to serve their Interests, whilst he intends only to pursue his own. He is made to believe that Kingdoms, infinitely preferable to those of this World, are to be gain'd by the Manner of cutting his Corns, or by Forms, Fashions, Habits, Postures, Cringes and Grimaces ; by using a Rote of Words, or by useless Speculations, and dancing after idle Harangues, and always by being an implacable Enemy, and a furious Adversary to all who have generous and beneficent Affections towards their own Species. He values Opinions like rotten Cheese, in proportion as they are old, and is more concern'd for People's believing Right, than for their doing Right. He thinks the Way to shew our Gratitude to God, is to refuse his Gifts ; and believes

Truth the more sacred the less 'tis understood, and nothing worthy to be call'd Faith but what is absurd to Reason, and contradicts all the Principles of Science. He is a fast Friend to every Thing that looks like a Mystery, and thinks common Sense too common, and sublime Nonsense to be always a Proof of Inspiration. He measures Virtue and Vice, Right and Wrong, not by the Interests of Mankind, but by scanty and partial Rules invented by Pedants and Hypocrites, and calculated chiefly for their own Benefit. He is a Friend to no Man, and all his Thoughts and Speculations are above Humanity and social Pleasures, and all the frail Things of this World; and so he keeps all his Money to himself, and, at last, perhaps, starves his Friends and Family, to leave it to such Wretches as he is, not out of Kindness to them, but to receive ample Payment again where he is going.

I have often wonder'd how this stupid Animal could ever be in Repute; how the most insignificant and worst Being in the Universe could be thought the most acceptable to the best; and how any one can be suppos'd to merit Heaven, by being useless upon Earth. Castruchio Castracani said well, 'That he could never believe that Friar Hieronomo had more Interest above than he himself had; and sure he judg'd right; yet the World ever have run, and, I doubt, ever will run, madding after Hermits, Cynicks, Dreamers of Dreams, Belchers of Prophecy, and recluse and sequestred Persons, who are suppos'd to know heavenly Things

Things in Proportion as they know nothing here. They call their solemn Folly, divine Wisdom; their Spleen and Melancholy, godly Contemplation; their envious, sullen, and morose Tempers, strict and rigid Virtue, and a Detestation of Vice; and Covetousness is Frugality, and the Contempt of Things below. Whereas a truly virtuous and godly Man, is the most candid, amiable, and best-natur'd Creature upon Earth: He spends his Life in doing all the Good he can, and to all the Men he can: He takes Pleasure in seeing all Men happy, and will endeavour to make them all happy: He has large and comprehensive Notions of the Deity, and as he finds in himself kind and beneficent Affections towards the whole Creation, believes that the supreme Being has the same, and, consequently, will not make our Happiness or Misery to depend upon what is out of our Power, or upon such Speculations or Actions as can produce no moral Good, but often destroy it, and promote Evil.

God wants nothing, and if we have any Gifts to bestow, his Creatures are our only proper Objects: but those who crave in his Name Largeſſes and Endowments, which they apply to their own Use and Luxury, and call their own Luxury and Pomp the serving of him, make the Almighty as greedy as they are, and the Giver of all Things, to want almost every Thing; and confining all their Bounty and Charity to their own dear Persons, think that he does so too, and that they are as dear to him as they are to themselves;

selves; and so hate and despise, distress and destroy, in the Name of God, all whom they hate for their own Sakes: So that, excepting a very few Men, (the most ridiculous and the worst of the whole) all the human Species are esteem'd by them as Outcasts, whom the wise Creator and Governor of the World has sent into it only to abhor and to damn them; and tho' his Favours are infinite, yet they think that he bestows them all upon a little Island, or a poor Desert, or on a little and contemptable Corner of the Earth, purely because the Inhabitants wear blue, or black, or broad Bonnets, quaint Doublets, or long Petticoats, and eat, or refuse to eat Fish or Flesh, and other Food given for the general Use of all Men; and make selfish and partial Speeches to him, and use crazy Distinctions about him, which he commands not, and which wise Men understand not, and which the weakest Men alone are govern'd by.

With the Bigots almost every Thing that is Truth is Blasphemy; and with them, a sour Face, and a bitter and implacable Heart are Qualifications so acceptable to the wise, merciful, and forgiving God, that he hates all who want them; so that in great Detestation of Blasphemy, they blasphemously make the God and Father of Mercies and of Man, a Party-Man too, or, at best, the Head of the most senseless, useless, inhuman, and mischievous Party in the Universe, the Party of Bigots; who being blindly and obstinately addicted to their own incurable Follies, are furiously bent against all the wise and sober Men in the World : They improve the World by defacing it, and their Way of building up, is to destroy and pull down ; This they call Edification.
in

But Religion is another, and a contrary Thing, and whoever would entertain a just Idea of the Divine Being, must conceive of him in direct Opposition to the Bigot's Conceptions, viz. That the God of Truth is not the Author of Contradictions ; That when he speaks to Men, he speaks not above the Capacities of Men, but to their Capacities, which is the End of Speaking ; That he who makes the Hearts of Men, is the best and only Judge of Mens Hearts, who cannot see into one another's, that being the only Province and Privilege of Omniscience ; That his perfect Goodness cannot punish Men, whom he has created naturally subject to Errors, for involuntary Errors ; That having not made Man perfect, he cannot be offended with him for natural and inevitable Imperfections.

That we cannot provoke him when we intend to adore him, That the best Way to serve him, is to be serviceable to one another, he himself, who is Omnipotent, wanting none of our impotent Assistance and Benefits, which must come from him, but cannot go from us to him ; That to hurt Men, or betray them for his Sake, is to mock him, and impiously to father upon the God of Wisdom and Peace, our own Rage and Folly : That to him neither Sounds, nor Gestures, nor Actions, are good or bad, pleasing or displeasing, but as the Intentions from whence they spring are sincere sincere or insincere, of which he alone can be Judge:

That he who made the World has not restrained his Gifts, Favours, and Mercies, to a Nook of it, nor picks out from among Men, who are all his, a few particular Minions and Favourites, or gives them Authority to domineer over the rest, and to oppress them in his Name, who is not the God of a Nation, or of a Sect, but of all Nations, Tongues, and Persuasions, and is heard of all that call upon him and fear him; That the only Way to please and resemble him, is to do, as he does, Good to All impartially, and to restrain Men from hurting or persecuting one another; And, in fine, That Anger, Revenge, and Ambition, are not Religion; nor the Author and Object of it an angry, partial, whimsical, and cruel Being; but that Religion is as different from Bigottry, and as far above it, as the wise, great, and good God is above weak, little, ill, and angry Men.

S I R,

IT is a common Objection against Free States, that they are ungrateful: But I think I shall be able to shew the contrary, and that they are much more grateful than Arbitrary trary Princes, and are rarely ungrateful but to those who use them ungratefully, and forfeit by it any Obligation they had laid upon them.

It is the chief and first Ambition of Free States to preserve themselves; and such as contribute most to that End amongst them, are generally placed by them in the first Stations of Figure and Power. But as Men generally over-rate their own Merit, publick Rewards, however great, are rarely so great as are the Expectations and Pretensions of Men to these Rewards: So that such as are preferr'd for serving, or for a Capacity of serving the Publick, are seldom preferr'd so high as they think they deserve; and being neither pleas'd with the Measure nor Duration of their Power, where it is not boundless and perpetual, they are apt to be struggling to make it so, tho' to the Ruin of those who gave it for their own Preservation; and to the overthrowing of every Purpose for which it was given. And when this is the Aim, as it too often is, the People grow presently very ungrateful, because they will not become Slaves to their own Servants. And here is the Source of most of the Contentions in the World between the Governors and the Governed. The People provoke their Rulers by a very heinous and ill-bred Crime, that of distinguishing between Protection and Oppression: For this they are ungrateful. They are ready enough almost every where to give their Governors too much; but that will not do. Nero, after he put off the Hypocrite, never never conferr'd any Office upon any Man, but he always gave him these short Instructions : You know what I have occasion for : Let it be your Care and mine that no Body else have any thing. Nor was Nero the last that made a Power to protect Property, a Warrant for seizing it.

Gratitude is, doubtless, due from the obliged to those who oblige them, as long as they do not pretend to measure or force their own Reward, nor to use the others ill upon the pure Merit of having used them well. There is such a Thing as the cancelling an Obligation in publick, as well as in private Life ; as when it is turn'd into an Injury, by being made the Means of Oppression, or a Pretence for Contempt, or Calumny. I would rather not be oblig'd, than abus'd for being oblig'd ; and I believe most Men are of my Mind.

A State may sometimes over-pay a Benefactor ; but scarce any Subject can do more for the State than he owes it. We owe all Things to our Country, because in our Country is contained every Thing that is dear to us, our Relations, our Fortunes, and our selves : And our Labours, our Studies, and our Lives are all due, upon Occasion, to our Country, which protects us in them all. But when we have dedicated all these to the State, it is far from being true, that the State ought to sacrifice itself, or venture any Part of its Security, to make us recompense. To save it from others, in order to seize it our selves, is so far from entitling us to any Reward but that of Resentment and Death, that as it is adding the the base Crimes of Treachery and Ingratitude to the cruel Crime of Usurpation, no foreign Foe can be half so wicked and detestable as such an intestine Traytor, who calls himself a Friend.

Spurius Maelius thought himself an unquestionable Benefactor to the Roman People, for having bestowed on them gratis a large Quantity of Corn in a Time of Dearth; by which false Bounty he gain'd the Hearts of the many, who saw not into his Design of bribing and feeding them, in order to enslave them. But Servilius Ahala, who kill'd him, was a much greater and a real Benefactor, because in Maelius he slew their most dangerous Enemy. T. Manlius defended the Capitol bravely and generously; but when, not content with the many Honours that were done him for a worthy Action, he would have unworthily oppressed Rome itself for having saved Part of it, he was justly thrown headlong from that very Capitol.

Cæsar and Marinus were the most ungrateful Monsters that ever liv'd: They had done brave Things, not for the State, as the Event shew'd, but for themselves; and the State cover'd them with Honours, adorn'd them with Magistracies and Triumphs, loaded them with Benefits, and pursued them, even to Profusion, with all publick and splendid Marks of Respect. But all this could not satisfy these shameless Great Men, unless they had a Power granted them perpetual and enormous, a Power destructive of all Liberty, and of the State

State that gave it. And so they barbarously oppress'd the State that exalted them.

On what Side, in this Instance, did the Ingratitude lie? Is there a Pretence for charging that generous People with this base Vice, or for acquitting these Parricides from the blackest? If the Prince of Orange, having at the Head of the Dutch Troops, driven the invading French out of Seven Provinces, had enslav'd the States with their own Forces, because, perhaps, they had refused to deliver up their Government to his Will and Pleasure, and to give him a Power to oppress them, as a Reward for having defended them: Who would have been ungrateful in this Case? the Prince or the States? They for refusing to be Slaves, or he for making them Slaves?

The People lose much more by their Generosity to their Benefactors, than the Benefactors lose by the Ingratitude or Stinginess of the People, whose Fault is almost always on the other Side. By giving them too much, they often tempt, and enable them to take all; as in the Cases of Marius, Sylla, Cæsar, Pististratus, Agathocles, Oliver Cromwell, the late Kings of Denmark and Sweden, and many more. But suppose it had happen'd sometimes (which has rarely happen'd) that a worthy Man should not meet a proper Reward from his Countrymen, for publick Services done them; it is still better that he has too little, or even none, than too much; and a worthy Man will never seek Revenge upon his Country for a Mistake in his Merit; a Mistake which may be easily committed, and is at worst pardonable. But a Man who has serv'd his Country, and then turns it upside down, because it has not, or he thinks it has not, given him Reward enough, shews that he deserv'd none.

Sometimes a Man's ill Deeds ballance his good; and then he pays himself; or overballance them, and then he is entitled more to Punishment than Reward; and both Rewards and Punishments ought to be faithfully paid, tho' there is generally more Crime and Insecurity in not punishing well, than in not paying well, — a Fault too frequent in Free States, who, dazzled with great Benefits, are often blind to greater Offences, or overlook them, and reward before they enquire.

The dearest and most valuable Things, are most apt to create Jealousies and Fears about them; and the dearest of all being Liberty, as that which produces and secures all the rest, the People's Zeal to preserve it has been ever call'd Ingratitude, by such as had Designs against it; and others, ignorant of its Value, or indifferent about it, have promoted and continued the false Charge. Shakespear, in the Tragedy of Timon of Athens, makes Alciades, who was banish'd by that State, cry out with Indignation, Oh the ungrateful Spirit of a Commonwealth! And I have seen a loud and vehement Clap rais'd upon it by those who were angry at the Word Commonwealth, tho' they liv'd under a Free Government: For every Free State is, in a large Sense, a Commonwealth; and I think our own the freest in the World. In my Opinion, Alciades, tho' a brave Man, was justly exil'd as an

an ambitious and dangerous Man, who behav'd himself turbulently in that City, and was perpetually creating or inflaming Factions in it, and against it, and shew'd too plainly, that he aim'd at over-turning it for the Sake of that uncontrollable Power, which he could not have while its Government subsisted. The Citizens of Athens treated him with great Distinctions, and gave him great Authority and eminent Commands, and only banish'd him, out of Fear of him, for which they had too much Ground.

States have been often destroy'd by being too generous and too grateful; and where they are really ungrateful, they are only so through Error; to which however they are not so subject as absolute Princes, who generally destroy their greatest Men, and prefer the vilest; and in their Courts Pimps often ruin Patriots. I think those, who most dislike free Governments, do not pretend to shew above four or five Instances of Ingratitude in the Roman People, from the Beginning of their Commonwealth to the End of it, for several hundred Years; and Coriolanus and Camillus are two of those Instances.

As to Coriolanus, he was justly banish'd, as a declar'd Enemy to the Equality of the Government, and engag'd in an open Design to oppress the People; which Design he executed with all Fierceness and Contempt, and even Outrage, surrounded like a Monarch, with Guards of the young hot-headed Nobility: And tho' the People did him no Injustice, yet to be reveng'd upon them, he invaded vaded his Country at the Head of a foreign Enemy.

Camillus was guilty of the same Partiality, tho' not in the same Degree, towards the Nobles, and had broke his Word with the People; for both which he was banish'd: But by saving his Country afterwards, he gloriously cancell'd all past Faults, and was gratefully styl'd the second Founder of Rome, and highly honour'd, and even ador'd to the End of his Life, by that grateful People in every Instance where they could shew it. And, indeed, all the Ingratitude that can be charg'd upon them, was, their opposing in their own Defence, the Encroachments of the Nobility; and the excellent Laws produc'd by that Opposition, shew'd its Reasonableness and Necessity.

Scipio Africanus, is likewise mention'd as another great Instance of Ingratitude in the Romans. He was a great and glorious Commander: He had forc'd Hannibal, the most dangerous foreign Foe the Romans ever had, out of Italy, which he had ravag'd successfully many Years; he had conquer'd the same Hannibal in Battle, and subdued Carthage and Africa, and he had assisted his Brother Asiaticus in conquering the great King Antiochus. For which extraordinary Services and Merit, he was the Darling of the People, who were so far from being ungrateful to him, that they violated the Laws of Rome, and of their own Security, to do him Honour, and not only made a Youth their chief Magistrate, but renew'd the Dignity so often, that the Precedent prov'd pernicious nicious to them : And the extraordinary Steps taken by him and them, and by them for his Sake, were of dangerous Example and Consequence, and, without his intending it, shook the Foundations of Rome, and made Way for the violent Proceedings and Usurpations of Marius, and afterwards of Caesar.

Scipio did likewise another Thing, which ought by no Means to have been suffer'd in a Free State. When he was cited to answer before the People, to the Crimes with which he was charg'd, he refus'd to answer. Upon this very Day, my Countrymen, says he, I vanquish'd Hannibal ; and tearing the Papers that contain'd the Charge, walk'd haughtily out of the Assembly. This was disowning, or contemning the supreme Authority of Rome ; and yet the People were so personally fond of the Man, that they would decree nothing severe against him. He retir'd to his own Country-House, where he liv'd peaceably all the rest of his honourable Life.

I am, &c.

S I R,

NO People upon Earth were more grateful to their good Citizens than the Greeks and Romans were, or encourag'd Virtue more, or rewarded it better : Nor did they scarce ever banish any Man till he became terrible to them ;

them; and then it was Time. Nor is there one great absolute Monarchy in the World, or ever was from the Beginning of it, but destroys more innocent Men in a Month, than the Commonwealth of Rome did in a hundred Years; besides that, a free State produces more great Men in fifty Years, than an absolute Monarchy does in a thousand.

Those who had done any signal good Service to the State of Athens, were endow'd with eminent Privileges, and distinguish'd with all publick Marks of Honour: They had the first Seats at publick Entertainments and Assemblies; they had publick Statues erected to them; they had Crowns conferr'd upon them; they were exempted from Duties, Taxes, and Contributions; they were maintain'd at the publick Charge, and sometimes their Families after them: The Publick resent'd the Injuries done them; buried them magnificently; made publick Orations in their Praise; portion'd out their Daughters, and paid lasting Honours to their Name. And all this at a Time when publick Honours were only the Rewards of Merit, and parsimoniously distributed.

The Athenians had a particular Law against Ingratitude: And as to the Ostracism, which may seem to contradict it, and by which they banish'd for ten Years, such great Men as they judg'd formidable to their State, tho' they had formerly serv'd it; it ought to be consider'd in its Behalf, that the Athenians, like other Free States, had suffer'd so much from their First-Rate Citizens, who suppress'd their Liberty under Colour of advancing it, that they

they had great Reason to be jealous of them. Whoever would live in a Free State, must live upon a Foot of Equality, which great Officers, accustom'd to command, care not to do; and if they do not, they are justly remov'd. It is better that one Man, however innocent, should suffer, than a whole People be ruin'd, or even hurt, if not by him, yet by his Example: Nor ought they to shew, in one Instance that cannot harm them, an Indulgence, which, in other, and future Instances, may be their Overthrow. Besides, the Ostracism took nothing from any Man, but a Power of hurting every Man: It affected not their Goods, nor their Persons, nor even their good Name; and left them their full Possessions, and their full Liberty every where but at Athens, whither after ten Years, they had a Right to return, and were often recall'd much sooner. It was likewise made use of sometimes, only to pacify the Fury of the Envious, and to protect the Innocent from it; and when base Fellows came at last to be banish'd by it, it was laid aside.

The first Purpose of the Ostracism was to keep publick Benefactors from turning publick Parricides, great Men from being too great, and Subjects from growing too powerful for the State; — a reasonable Precaution, and practis'd some Way or other by every State in the World: Nor can any State subsist where it is not practis'd. Even in England, the hanging of two or three great Men among the many guilty, once in a Reign or two, would have prevented much Evil, and many

many Dangers and Oppressions, and sav'd this Nation many Millions.

If we now consider absolute Monarchy, we shall find it grafted upon Ingratitude, which is blended with the Root of it. Arbitrary Princes cannot, dare not, be grateful to elevated Merit, which by the Tenour of their Power they are oblig'd to dread. They only consider their single Selves, and their separate Interests, and must cut off, for their own Security, every Man whose true Glory may eclipse their false, and who draws away, in any Degree, the Thoughts and Eyes of the People. If they have no Magnanimity of their own, they hate or fear such as have; or if they are brave themselves, they will be jealous of those who are more so, or as much. The same may be said of every other Virtue. They may heap Wealth upon Buffoons, and confer Dignities upon Parasites; but celebrated Virtue, conspicuous Abilities, and signal Services, are their Eye-Sores, and certain Aversion. If they are hated, they will not bear that any one shall be esteem'd; and if they are valued themselves, they will hate Rivals.

Under most of the Roman Emperors, popular Virtue was certain Death, Ob virtutes certissimum exitium; and those who serv'd them most, were surest of Destruction, Nec minus Periculum ex magna Fama quam ex mala. Germanicus, who sav'd the Empire to Tiberius, his Uncle and Father by Adoption, by reconciling to him the mutinous and revolted Legions, was the first great Sacrifice to his Jealousy, being poison'd in Asia, whither he was sent under under pretence of Commanding it. And thus Nero rewarded Corbulo, and thus Domitian rewarded Agricola; both the greatest Officers of their Time, and the greatest Benefactors to these ungrateful Tyrants, who aim'd at cutting up Virtue by the Roots: Nor did Vespasian, the first Roman Emperor, that chang'd for the better, prove much more grateful to Antonius Primus, who had signally serv'd him, and pav'd his Way to the Imperial Diadem.

It were endless to mention other absolute Monarchies. They are all animated by the same ungrateful, cruel and suspicious Spirit, and make Havock of every Thing that is good, destroying fastest those who serve them most. If they are ever grateful, they are only so to the vilest Instruments of their Tyranny; but for such as serve them against their foreign Foes with just and popular Glory, they are generally sacrific'd to their endless Jealousy of every Thing that is Noble. Bellisarius is an affecting Instance of this, an illustrious General, who, in the Decline of the Roman Empire, did, as it were, new-conquer the World for his Royal Master; and, for a Reward, was stripp'd of all that he had, and turn'd off to beg his Bread with his Eyes put out.

It is a fine Observation of Tacitus, Neque Nobilem, neque Ingenium, neque Libertinum quidem preponere armis, regia utilitas est. "It is " the Business and special Interest of a
 " arbitrary Prince, that his Forces be com" manded, neither by a Nobleman, nor by
 " Free Man, nor, indeed, by any Man wh

“ is two Degrees remov'd from a Slave. ” Or, if such Princes are oblig'd by the Necessity of their Affairs, to employ an illustrious Person in an important Command; they always employ him with Fear; and when their Turn is serv'd, and he has made them safe, dismiss him into Obscurity with Contempt, if he escapes so well; for all their Suspicions generally end in Blood. Matchiavel, who knew this well, says, That a great and successful General, under an Arbitrary Prince, has but two Ways to escape the certain Ruin, which his Glory, Services, and Renown, will else bring upon him: He must either quit the Army, and, retiring from all Power, live like a private Man; or depose his Master, and set up himself: Which last is generally the safer Course.

It is well known how the Ottoman Monarchs reward their bravest Bassa's. The Successful and Unfortunate have the same Fate: As the latter are sacrific'd to Rage, the other are to Jealousy; and even their own Sons have been recompensed with Death, for deserving Esteem. Nor is that cruel Ingratitude peculiar to one Race or Family of Princes, but eternally attach'd to that Sort of Power wherever it is found.

But far different is the Spirit of the People: They are prone to Gratitude, and lavish in their Affections and Returns for Benefits receiv'd. Nothing is too much, nor too high for their Benefactor, or for one whom they think so. They are apt to continue blind to his Faults, even when he has forfeited their Favour; and to remain constant in their Zeal to his Name and Posterity, in Instances where they ought to detest both. This is abundantly exemplified and confirm'd by the lasting Respect and Reverence paid by the Romans, to those Plagues of Rome, and of the Earth, the Family of the Cæsars; by the French, to the stupid and sanguinary Posterity of Charlemain; by the Turks, to the bloody Family of Ottoman; by the Ægyptians, to their luxurious and contemptible Ptolomies; by the Jews, to the cruel Race of the Asmoneans, or Macca-bees; by the Parthians, to the barbarous Line of the Arfacides; and by almost every Instance of every People in the World. I could mention Instances here at Home, but they will occur fast enough to every Reader who knows any thing of our History. The People are indeed grateful and constant, even to Superstition, to Persons and Names to which they conceive themselves once obliged. Nor do they ever act ungratefully, but where they are first deceived by those whom they trust. The People of Athens, deceiv'd by some of their Demagogues, put once to Death some of their Sea Officers, who did not deserve it; but they soon grew appriz'd of their Error, and were severely reveng'd upon the traiterous Calumniators who caus'd it.

Several Instances may, no doubt, be found of the People's Ingratitude to their Friends, and of the contrary Quality in some Absolute Monarchs. But Exceptions do not weaken a Rule.

S I R,

AS I have in former Papers treated of the Abuse of Words ; so I shall in this, Discourse about the Use of them. They are the Signs of Ideas, as Figures are of Numbers, and are intended to convey Mens Conceptions to one another : They have no more Meaning in themselves, than inarticulate Sounds, till Men have agreed to put a Meaning upon them, which is wholly Arbitrary ; and therefore unless they mean the same Things by the same Words, that is, annex the same Conceptions to the same Sounds, they cannot understand one another, or discourse together. If one Man annexes more or less Ideas to the same Words, than another does whom he reasons with, it is impossible they should agree in Conclusions ; when their Premisses are different, their Reasonings will be a Game at Blindman's-Buff : And therefore it is absolutely necessary in all Disputes, to settle the Meanings of the Terms made use of, before any Thing can be affirmed or denied on either Side.

A Word not standing for any Idea, is only a bare Sound ; and it is no more to one who does not know what Idea it stands for ; and consequently, the agreeing in Sounds, and not agreeing in the Meaning of them, is no

Agree-

Agreement at all ; and tho' this may be a good Test of Orthodoxy amongst some Sets of Ecclesiasticks, yet I will presume to say, it is none in common Sense. It appears to me, that most of the Polemick Quarrels in the World, have flow'd from this Inobservance. Men use the same Sounds to express different Conceptions, either in Whole, or in Part ; that is, one Man comprehends more or less Ideas in the Terms he makes use of than another, and then makes use of other Words equally uncertain, to explain that Meaning ; and so in a few Propositions quite looses his Argument, and the Combatants quarrel about what they have been talking of : But tho' this Manner of Scuffling in the Dark, is a great Obstruction, and almost an unsurmountable Bar to all sorts of useful Knowledge, yet it highly conduces to the Power and Credit of those who derive Riches and Authority from the Ignorance and Credulity of others.

It gives them the Reputation of Learning, for talking unintelligibly : It enables them to Discourse upon all Subjects alike, and to fetch every thing out of every thing ; for by not explaining their Words, they make them signify what they please, and vary them as often as they have Occasion ; so that in the Course of a Debate, they have sail'd in all the Points of the Compass. This Abuse is yet more observable and mischievous in Translations from one Language to another ; for as few or no Men understand a dead Language, in many Respects, in the Sense it was spoken in, (and indeed few Men of the same Country, and the the same Language, speak many Words in the same Sense their Ancestors spoke them; the Meaning of Words, like all other Things, being in perpetual Rotation,) and as few Words in any Language which comprehend complex Ideas, are exactly answered by correspondent Words in any other, that is, they don't contain just the same Number of Ideas: So it is very difficult, if not impossible, in many Instances, to make an exact Translation; and consequently, very easy to make a false one; and therefore it is very ridiculous, to call it by no worse a Name, in controverted Points, to build an Hypothesis upon the Signification of single Words in a dead Language, (which, perhaps, was translated from another Language,) when we neither know their Manner of Speaking, the Philosophy and Speculations they were conversant with, nor the Customs to which they alluded, and are very sure they are different from our own, and in many Instances, that they had not the same common Conceptions, or Images.

But it is not enough that we must have what are often call'd Ideas to our Words, but they must be adequate ones; for all inadequate Ideas are no Ideas; that is, they must be adequate as far as they are Ideas: What stands for no Conception, stands for nothing; and the Word used, can only stand for the Conception, such as it is, and as far as it goes; and when the Conception goes no further, no Word can stand for that which is not. It is certain, that there is no one Thing in the Universe, of which we can have an adequate Conception in the strict Sense of those Words, but we convey by Words only such Conceptions as we have, which possibly do not exhaust the millionth Part of their Properties; but then we are in the Dark as to all the rest, and neither can affirm or deny any Thing about them: And if one Man takes in more or less Ideas in the Term he makes use of than another, he does not talk with him ad idem.

One Man has no Conception of Gold but by the Colour, and he will call Princes-Metal Gold; another knows it by its Weight, Fineness, and Touch; and if a new Metal should be discover'd, which answers all these Marks, and should yet want some Medicinal Qualities, or, perhaps, the same Solubility as Gold has, yet he will notwithstanding call it Gold, according to the Properties his Imagination has annexed to the Word Gold, and all these three will be call'd by the same Name, and yet different Metals will be meant; and every one of these Conceptions, as far as they go, are adequate, tho' neither of them are so to the Subject, which has undoubtedly many Properties which no one knows any thing of; but then we do not reason upon those Properties, nor do the Sounds we use stand for them.

From what has been said appears the Absurdity of being told, that we must believe Things we do not understand; or of believing Things above Reason, though not contrary to Reason. We must have Ideas, or Images, of all Objects of Belief, or else we believe in nothing, but that we hear a Sound, and it is the

the same Thing to us whether it signifies any thing, or not, if we do not know what it signifies. If a Man makes a Proposition to me in the Chinese Language, and tells me that I must believe it, nothing here can be the Object of my Faith, but that the Man does not tell me a Lye, which has nothing to do with the Proposition it self; and it would have been the same Thing to me, if he had told me that I must believe in his Thought, without telling me what that Thought was; and there can be no Difference, if he uses Words in a Language I am acquainted with, if I do not understand the Meaning in which he uses those Words.

From hence appears the Ridicule of a late Sect in Holland, and of many other visionary Madmen at home, who think the Scripture is to be for the most Part understood metaphorically, and who find Meanings in it which the Words do not naturally import; which is making the Almighty speak in Riddles to his Creatures, and obliging them to pay largely out of their Substance, to those who make them yet greater Riddles. What can be more absurd and wicked, than to suppose, that the great and good God, should speak to Mankind with a Design not to be understood; should give them a Rule to act by, and yet express that Rule in Words which few can pretend to apprehend, and those few differ about. Certainly, as has been said, Words are of no use but to convey Ideas; and if they are not us'd in their common Acceptation, and to signify those Conceptions which Custom has annex'd to them, or such as Men shall agree to put upon them, then they must be perfectly useless, will convey no Ideas at all, can give us no Rule, nor can communicate any Knowledge.

It is certain, as has been said, that no Man's Perceptions can exhaust the Properties of any one Thing in the World : All that we know of them is from a few obvious Qualities which affect our Senses ; but without doubt they have Thousands of others, of which we know nothing, much less can we know any thing of their Substratum, or internal Essence, or Contexture ; but then we can believe nothing of those hidden Essences, or Qualities, nor do we mean any thing about them when we talk of any Being or Substance ; as in the Instance before given : If a Man carries to a Goldsmith a solid Substance, and asks him what he thinks it is, and he looks upon the Colour, touches it, weighs it, and melts it, and then tells him he believes it is Gold ; it is certain the Goldsmith neither believes nor affirms any thing about it, but of its Colour, its Touch, its Weight, and its Solubility, which are his Ideas of Gold : But Gold has, without question, many other Properties which he has never heard of ; but then he does not take in those Properties in his Perception of Gold ; and he neither does, nor can believe any thing about them, till he has formed some Idea of those hidden Qualities.

This leads me to consider what Men mean, when they say they believe in a Mystery ! We must understand the Meaning of the Words connected, and of the Verb which connects them, them, and makes them a Proposition, or else we believe in nothing, that is, we must have a Perception of all those Ideas the Words stand for in our Imaginations; and so far it is no Mystery. But then we may be told, that the Beings, to which we have annexed those Ideas, and by which we distinguish them from other Beings, may, and undoubtedly have many other Qualities, or Properties, that we know nothing of; which must be granted to be true of every Thing in Nature; and in this Sense every Thing is a Mystery, and every Man will readily believe such a Mystery. But then if we are told, that we must believe in the Properties, or Qualities, of which we know nothing, or have any Idea of; I think the Mystery will consist in the Nonsense of the Proposition; and 'tis the same Thing to tell us, that we must believe in Fee-fa-fum; for a Man cannot believe without believing something; and he must know what that something is, that is, he must know what he believes, or else his Belief is only an abstract Word, without any Subject to believe in, or any Thing of.

Thus when we say, we believe there are three Persons in the Trinity, and but one God, we must have distinct Ideas to the Words, (viz.) Person, Trinity, and God: For if Men have no Meaning to these Words, they mean nothing by the Proposition; and if they annex different Perceptions to them, then they have a different Creed, tho' they fancy they subscribe the same. No one can know whether another is orthodox in his Sense, till the Terms are defined, and stand for the same Ideas in both their Minds. To say that they believe in three Persons, without telling what they mean by the Word Person, is the same as to say, that they believe in three Somethings, or in the Word Three, which indeed is a very mysterious Belief, and a pretty Center of Unity; for no Man can believe any thing else, till he has fix'd a Meaning to the Word Person; and if another does not agree with him in that Meaning, they will differ in Religion, though they agree in Sounds, and perhaps in falling foul upon every one who desires them to explain themselves; which Behaviour, amongst too many People, is the main Test of Orthodoxy.

They must agree also in what they mean by the Word God; I do not mean they must define his Essence, have any adequate Notion of his Infinity, Eternity, or of the Sensorium of his Existence; for of these Things we neither know, nor can know any thing: But we must know what we mean by the Sound we make use of, that is, we must have a Perception of those Images annex'd to the Word God, in our Minds, and a Perception adequate to it self, tho' in no wise adequate and correspondent to the Subject, which, in different Men, I doubt, are very various; and when they are so, they plainly differ in the Object of their Worship, and are of a different Religion, tho' they may think themselves to be of the same: This shall be the Subject of some other Paper hereafter; in which I shall shew how absurd, as well as impious it is, for Men to fall together

by

by the Ears upon the Account of their Difference in Trifles, when they scarce agree in any one Thing in the World, if they explain themselves, and not even in the Attributes annex'd to the Object of all Worship, though they can know nothing of him, but from his Attributes.

S I R,

GOOD Breeding is the Art of showing Men, by external Signs, the internal Regard we have for them. It arises from good Sense, improv'd by conversing with good Company. A well-bred Fool is impertinent; and an ill-bred wise Man, like a good Instrument out of Tune, is awkward, harsh, and disagreeable. A courteous Blockhead, is, however, a more acceptable Guest almost every where, than a rude Sage. Men are naturally so fond of themselves, that they will rather mispend their Time with a complaisant Ape, than improve it with a surly and thwarting Philosopher. Every Bow, or good Word, whencesoever it comes, is taken by us as a Sign of our Importance, and a Confession of our Merit; and the neglect of that Complaisance, as a Token that we are thought of none; a Reproach, which, however silent, few care to bear.

Good

Good Breeding is never to be learn'd by Study; and therefore they who study it are Coxcombs and Formatists, and stiff Pedants. The best bred Men, as they come to be so by Use and Observation only, practise it without Affectation. You see Good Breeding in all they do, without seeing the Art of it. It is a Habit, and like all others, acquir'd by Practice. A weak and ignorant Man, who has liv'd in good Company, shall enter a Room with a better Grace, and say, common Things much more agreeably than a profound wise Man, who lives by himself, or with only such as himself, and is above the Forms of the World, and too important to talk of indifferent Things, and to be like other People. A Footman employ'd in How D'ye's, shall address himself to a Person of Figure with more Decorum, and make a Speech with more Ease, than a learned Serjeant, who lives wholly over Briefs; or the deep Head of a College, occupied on-ly in momentous Science. I have known a Man, who, with the Learning of a whole University, had the Manners of a Clown, and the Surliness of a Porter; not from the Want of Sense, tho' that Want is very consistent with a World of Learning, but from living long in a College, and dictating to Boys and Pupils, or with old Fellows, who had no more Breeding than himself, and, like himself, were spoil'd by living rately upon the Square with any other Sort of People.

1 Good Breeding therefore is never to be learn'd in a College, where the Sphere of Conversation is so narrow, where the Distance between between Men is so great, and where the Old have none to teach the Young. Hence you generally see young Men come from the Universities with a conceited Air, and a quaint Manner, which often turns them into Fops: They are generally either pert or prim: The Tone of their Voice, and the Position of their Muscles, shew their Accomplishments before they have spoke two Words: Their Step, and the Manner of using their Legs and Arms, do the same; and every Joint about them, and every Action they do, declare the Place and Way of their Education. As to the Senior Fellows, and Heads of Houses, they are such starch'd Pedants, such solemn Mamouches, and such Kingly old Fops, that from their Mein you may know their Characters, and read their Titles and Preferments in their Hate. They carry the College about them wherever they go, and talk at a Table as they do at a Lecture; or, if sometimes they break into Gaiety, it is either imperious or insipid, disrespectful or awkward, and always ungrateful: They want a good Manner, less Conceit, and the Appearance, at least, of more Humility; all which are only to be acquir'd by living abroad in the World, and by conversing with all Sorts of Men. This accustoms one to treat all Men as they expect to be treated; and such general good Treatment given to all, is call'd Good Breeding.

Hence the Breeding of Courts is always the easiest and most refin'd. Courtiers have the constant Advantage of living daily with the best bred Men: Besides, having Occasion for all Sorts of People, they accustom themselves to use all Sorts of People civilly. By conversing with all Sorts, they can fall readily into all Sorts of Styles, and please every Body by talking to him in his own Way. They find too, by daily Experience and promiscuous Conversation, that the Difference between Men and Men is not so great, as an Unacquaintedness with Men would generally make it: They are therefore under no Awe, nor Shyness, in speaking to the Greatest; nor have any general Contempt for the Meanest; a Contempt, which too often rises from a wrong Judgment, grounded upon Pride, and continu'd by Inexperience. They consider, that as the Greatest can do them good, so the Meanest can hurt them. They are therefore respectful without Awe to those above them, and complaisant without Disdain to those below them. Courts therefore are the best Schools for Good Breeding; and to be well-bred, we must live not only with the best Sorts of Men, but be acquainted with all Sorts.
for

The Want of this general Conversation, may be one Reason why the Country Clergy are so often accus'd of Want of Breeding. They come from the University full of an Opinion, that all that is to be learned, is to be learn'd there; and believing themselves to have already every Accomplishment, they often remain without any. In their Parishes, they can learn nothing but an additional Pride, from seeing or fancying themselves the biggest Men there. If there is a Squire in the Place, he rarely mend them. If he has a delicate Taste, he will not converse with them: But it frequently happens, that his Taste is as crude as theirs, and consists in eating much, drinking more, and talking loud. From this conceited Education, and narrow Conversation, arises their Impatience of Contradiction, and their Readiness to contradict. I own I am always cautious of reasoning with the Vicar. His first Argument is generally an Assertion, and his next an Affront.

An engaging Manner and a genteel Address may be out of their Power; but it is in their Power to be condescending and affable. When People are obliging, they are said to be well-bred. The Heart and Intention are chiefly consider'd: When these are found friendly and sincere, the Manner of shewing it, however awkward, will be kindly overlook'd. Good Breeding is artificial Good Nature; and Complaisance is understood to be a Copy of the invisible Heart. When People are satisfied with one another's Good-will and Sincerity, the Forms that shew them are generally laid aside. Between intimate Friends there is little Ceremony, and less between Man and Wife. Some, however, is still necessary, because by Signs and Actions the Affections are shewn. But a courteous Behaviour which is known to mean nothing, goes for nothing, and is not necessary when the Meaning is known to be good. Expressions of Kindness, when they are not thought the Marks and Effects of Kindness, are empty Sounds: And yet these unmeaning Expressions are necessary in Life. We are not to declare to every Man whom we dislike, dislike, how much we dislike him, nor to shew it by dumb Signs. When a Man says, That he is my humble-Servant, he obliges me; not by the Words, which in common Speech signify scarce any thing, but because by these Words he shews, that he thinks me worth Notice. Breeding therefore is then just, when the Actions which it produces are thought sincere: This is its End and Success: It must seem produc'd by Kindness for the Person for whom it is shewn.

Good Breeding is of so great Importance in the World, that an Accomplishment this Way goes often further, than much greater Accomplishments without it can go. I have known Gentlemen who with moderate Parts and much good Breeding have been thought Great Men, and have actually come to be so. Great Abilities alone make no Man's Person amiable; and some have been unpopular with the Greatest, and some even ridiculous. But the gay, the easy, the complaisant Man, whose chief Abilities are in his Behaviour, pleases and obliges all, and is amiable to as many as he obliges. To learn this Behaviour, People must begin early. One who sets out into the World at Twenty, shall make twice as much Progress in Life, as one who with twice his Sense sets out at Forty, because he is then less susceptible of the Arts of Life. Habits are not to be got in a Day, and after a certain Age never. Forc'd Complaisance is Foppery, and affected Easiness is a Monster. I have seen a World of Tradesmen, and almost as many Gentlemen, take such Pains to be well-bred, that I have been in Pain for them: Native Plainness is a thousand Times better.

Com-

Complaisance is ingenious Flattery: It makes those to whom it is paid flatter themselves, while they take every Act of Complaisance in others, as a Declaration of Merit in themselves: And beyond a certain Degree, it is not innocent. Courtiers know its Efficacy so well, that to it alone no small Part of their Power is owing. Hence so many People have always been deceiv'd by civil Words, and kind Looks. To know speculatively the Delusions of this Art, is not sufficient to put you upon your Guard against it. A fair and plausible Behaviour, with a ready Rote of kind Expressions, and all the Appearances of Sincerity, will be apt to mislead you in Spight of your Fore-knowledge. They will catch your Senses, and beat you off your Theory in Politicks. You must find their Insincerity some Time before you will come to distrust it. Their Art and your own Self-love will conspire against you, drive away your Incredulity, and beget Faith, as it is often begot, against Evidence and Reason. You will still flatter your self, that you are an Exception to the Rule, tho' there were never another Exception. The Credulity of some is perfectly incurable; many have continued steady Believers in Spight of daily Proofs and fatal Experience, for twenty Years together. They were always persuaded, that every Promise was at least intended to be kept, and always forgave the breaking it. The Great Man smil'd graciously, bow'd courteously, excus'd himself earnestly; and vow'd to God, you should have the next thing. You miscar-

ry'd; and then, with a concern'd Face, he vow'd to God he could not help it, but promis'd again with the same solemn Vow, and is again believ'd, and always believ'd. This wretched Credulity is the Fruit of Self-love, of an Opinion that we are as considerable in the Eyes of others, as we are in our own. Mankind are govern'd by their Weaknesses; and all that Statesmen have to do to keep expecting Crowds about them, and attach'd to them, is to promise violently, to seem violently in earnest, and never to be so: That is, they must be extremely well-bred.

Good Breeding is indeed an amiable and persuasive Thing: It beautifies the Actions, and even the Looks of Men. But equally odious is the Grimace of Good Breeding. In Comparison with this, Bluntness is an Accomplishment. The Ape of a well-bred Man is just as offensive as the well-bred Man is agreeable: He is a Nuisance to his Acquaintance. I am frightened at the affected Smile and the Apish Shrug. When these foul Copies of Courtiers throw their civil Grin in one's Face, it is as much as one can do to avoid spitting in theirs. A starch'd Rogue, forcing Smiles, is a more hideous Sight than a Mummy. He is a Fugitive from Nature; and it is notable Impudence in such a Creature to pretend to be courteous.

As to Ill-Breeding, or Rudeness, there is something still worse in it than its Deformity. It is immoral; it is using others as you would not be used.

I am, &c.

S I R,

THE Word Reverence has had the Fate of many, indeed, almost all good Words, and done much Mischief: It signifies a solemn Regard paid to the Persons of Men of Gravity, of Religion, and of Authority. By these Qualifications Men are entitled to it. But when the Pride and Craft of Men, who have no real Gravity, and no real Religion, or a foolish one, and only a pretended or an absurd Authority, would annex Reverence only to grave or grotesque Names, it becomes as ridiculous to Men of good Sense, as it seems awful to such as have none. Reverence belongs only to reverend Qualities and reverend Actions. As to Names and Habits, the more grave they are, the more ludicrous they become, when worn by Persons who live loosely, and act ludicrously.

Garments signify nothing themselves. They grow first solemn, by being first worn by Men of Character and Solemnity: But the most solemn Garment becomes contemptible and diverting upon the Back of a Drole, a Buffoon, or upon a Cheat or Mountebank of any kind. The gravest Man alive dress'd up in the Cap and Coat of a Harliquin, would look like a Harliquin; and the gravest Speech he could make, would be laugh'd at: And yet a Coat Coat of many Colours was a Coat of Value in the East, in Jacob's Time, and his Favourite Son Joseph wore one. Nor do our own Ladies lose any Respect by wearing all the Colours of the Peacock and the Rainbow. On the contrary, the gravest Clothes put upon burlesque Animals, will look Burlesque. A monkey in a deep Coat, and a broad Beaver, would be still more a Monkey, and his Grimace would be still more diverting Grimace; and a Hog in a Pair of Jack-Boots, and a Coat of Mail, would make no formidable Figure, notwithstanding his warlike Equipment.

These two last Instances of the Monkey and the Hog may be farther improv'd, to shew the Spirit of false Reverence. A Monkey in a red Coat, and a Hog in Armour, would give no Offence to a Soldier, because his Character consists in Actions which these Creatures cannot perform nor mimick; and consequently these Animals, tho' accouter'd like a Soldier, cannot ridicule a Soldier. But if you put a Popish Mitre, and the rest of that sort of Gear, upon a Hog, the useless and stupid Solemnity of the Animal gives you instantly the Idea of a Popish Bishop, and, if you are not a Papist, will divert you: Or, if you dress up a Baboon in the fantastical Habit of a Romish Priest, that Animal which can chatter much and unintelligibly, and can really do most of the Tricks which the Priest himself can do, does genuinely represent the Original; and therefore creates true Mirth, and fully shews, that there cannot be much Reverence in that which a Baboon can perform as well, for ought I know know better, as he is naturally a Creature of Grimace and Humour. And if the said Bishop and Priest could not with any Temper bear the Sight, their Rage and Impatience would be still farther Proofs, that the Monkey did them Justice, that the Tryal was Successful, and the Mirth occasion'd by it just. Such Sport would indeed be tragical in Popish Countries; which is but another Confirmation, that False Reverence cannot bear Ridicule, and that the true is not affected by it.

Many of the ancient Greek Philosophers took great Pride, and found mighty Reverence, in the Length and Gravity of their Beards. Now an old Goat, who had as much Gravity and Beard as any of them, had he been placed in one of their Chairs, would, doubtless, have provok'd the Philosopher, and diverted the Assembly. Pomp and Beard were therefore ridiculous, since they could be ridicul'd: But nothing that constitutes a Philosopher, neither Genius, nor Virtue, nor useful Learning, nor any thing that is good for something, can be ridicul'd, at least justly ridicul'd. The odd Dance of Judges and Bishops in the Rehearsal, does neither ridicule Bishops nor Judges, because they never practise such odd Dances: But if these grave Men met and gambol'd together, as they do there, the Ridicule would be strong upon them.

It is a Jest to expect from all Men great Reverence to that which every Man may do, whether it consists in Reading, or Repeating, or Wearing, or Acting. Where is the Difficulty or Merit of saying certain Words, or of making making Bows, or of spreading the Arms, or crossing them, or of wearing a long Coat, or a short Cravat? It is Impudence and Imposture to demand singular and vast Respect to small and common Things. Superior Virtue and Capacity, publick Actions and Services done to Mankind; a generous and benevolent Heart, and Greatness of Mind, are the true Objects and Sources of Reverence. But to claim Reverence to Prating, and to Cuts, and Colours, and Postures, is stupid, ridiculous and saucy. The Abc of a Tinker, is as good as a Pope's Abc; and it is open Cheating and Conjuring to pretend, that the same Words have not the same Force out of the Mouth of a Cobler as out of a Cardinal's Mouth. When any one of these mighty Claimers (I had almost said Clamorers) of Reverence, from their visionary Empire of Words and Tricks, can by the Magick of their Art remove a Mountain or a Mole-hill, or raise a House, or a dead Insect, or kill a Heretick, or a Grasshopper by a Charm, I am ready to bow down before them: But while I see any of them living like other Men, or worse, and doing nothing but what so many Chimney-Sweepers (who can read) may do as well; I can consider such who do so only as solemn Lyers, and Seducers, and as much worse than Fortune-Tellers, as they cheat People out of much more Money, and fill their Minds with worse Terrors.

The Roman Augurs made no such base Use of their Power, and of their ghostly Trade, which was instituted, at least practis'd, for the Ends of good Policy; and, as far as I can find, they

they had no Revenues : I would therefore have respected them as they were great Officers of the Roman State. But had an Augur, as an Augur, demanded Reverence of me for his long Staff, his Trick, and Divinations, I should have done what Cato the elder wonder'd they themselves did not do as often as they met, laugh'd in his Face, as I would in the Face of any Man who pretended to be my Superior and Director, because his Coat was longer than mine, or of a different Colour ; or because he utter'd Words which I could utter as well, or play Pranks which a Posture-Master could play better.

I will reverence a Man for the Good he does, or is inclin'd to do ; and for no other Reason ought I. But if under the Pretence of doing me Good, which I neither see nor feel, he picks my Pocket, and does me sensible Harm, or would do it ; how can I help hating and despising him ? If he turns Religion into Selfishness, and a plain Trade, or by it destroys Morality ; if he sets himself up in God's Stead, and by pretending boldly to his Power, abuses his holy Name, and oppresses his Creatures ; if he exclaims against Covetousness, and is governed by it ; and practises every Vice which he condemns ; if he preaches against the World, and yet has never enough of it ; and against the Flesh, and yet is visibly govern'd by all its worst Passions and Appetites ; if he takes immense Wages for promoting the Welfare of Society, and yet disturbs, impoverishes, and enslaves it ; how can I reverence him, if I would ?

would? And is he not lost to all Modesty if he desires it?

If Men would preserve themselves from Superstition, and Servitude, and Folly, they must beware of reverencing Names and Accidents. A wise Man does not reverence Rulers for their Insignia and great Titles; but as there is no Use of Rulers, but to do Service to Mankind, he reverences them for that Service done: If they do none, he despises them: If they do Mischief, he hates them. What are Men revered for, but for the good Talents which they possess, or for useful Offices they bear. Now if a Man has never a good Quality, or having such, abuses them; or if he does no Good with the Office he bears, but Harm, which he must do, if he does no Good, every Omission by which many are hurt, being a Crime against many; how am I to reverence him, for taking away by his Conduct the only Cause of Reverence? If he gives me Cause to hate him, am I for all that to love him? Either there is no such Passion as Hatred, which none but a Madmen will say, or it must be rais'd by the Causes that raise it; and what are those Causes, but Mischief done, when Good is due, and expected; or the Disappointment of a great Good; which is a great Mischief.

But when People are taught to reverence Butchers, Robbers, and Tyrants, under the revered Name of Rulers, and to adore the Names and Persons of Men, tho' their Actions be the Actions of Devils: Then here is a confirm'd and accomplish'd Servitude, the Servitude

Servitude of the Body, secur'd by the Servitude of the Mind, and Oppression fortified by Delusion. This is the Height of human Slavery. By this, the Turk and the Pope reign. They hold their horrid and sanguinary Authority by false Reverence, as much as by the Sword. The Sultan is of the Family of Ottoman, and the Pope St. Peter's Successor; they are therefore revered, while they destroy human Race. The Christians hate the Turk, and call him a Tyrant: And Protestants dread the Pope, and call him an Impostor. And yet I could name Christians who have Tyrants of their own, as bad as the Sultan; and I could name Protestants who have had Impostors of their own, as cruel as the Pope, had their Power been as great, and their Hands as loose. Men see the Follies and Slavery of others; but their own Nonsense is all sacred, their own Popes and Sultans are all of heavenly Descent, and their Authority just and inviolable. But Truth and Falshood, Wisdom and Folly, do not vary with the Conceptions and Prepossessions of Men. Happiness and Misery, Oppression and Imposture, are as bad in Christendom as in Turky, in Holland as in Rome. Protestant Rulers have no more Right than the Sultan to oppress Protestants; and the Pope has as good a Title as a Protestant Parson to deceive Protestants. God forbid that all Religions should be alike; but all who make the same ill Use of every Religion, are certainly alike; as are all Governors, Turkish, Popish, or Protestant, who make the same ill Use of Power.

If therefore all Governors whatsoever, of what Conduct soever, are to be revered; why not the Turk and old Muly, who are both great Governors, and have as much a Divine Authority to be Tyrants, as any Governor of any Name or Religion ever had? And if all Clergy whatsoever are to be revered, why not the Druids, and the Priests of Baal, and the Priests of Meccha and of Rome? But if only the Good of both Sorts are to be reverenc'd, why have we been told so much of the mighty Respect due in the Lump, to Priests and Rulers? Is there any other Way in common Sense to gain Respect, but to deserve it? Could the Romans reverence their Governor Nero for robbing them of their Lives and Estates, for burning their City, and for wantonly making himself Sport with human Miseries? Could the first Christians reverence him for dressing them up in the Skins of wild Beasts, and setting on wild Beasts to devour them; or for larding them all over with Pitch and Tallow, and lighting them up like Lamps to illuminate the City? If we reverence Men for their Power alone, why do we not reverence the Devil, who has so much more Power than Men? But if Reverence is due only to virtuous Qualities and useful Actions, it is as ridiculous and superstitious to adore great mischievous Men, or unholy Men with holy Names, as it is to worship a false God, or Satan in the Stead of God. Are we to be told, that tho' we are to worship no God but the good and true God, yet we are to pay Reverence, which is human Worship, to wicked Men, provide they they be great Men, and to honour the false Servants of the true God, whom they dishonour? Or, that any Sort of Men can be his Servants or Deputies in any Sense, but a good and sanctified Sense? And if they are not, are we for the Sake of God, to reverence those who belye him, and are our Enemies? Or, am I to reverence the Men, tho' I detest their Actions and Qualities, which constitute the Characters of Men? Can I love or hate Men, but for what they are, and for what they do? We ought to reverence that which is good, and the Men that are good: Are we therefore to reverence Wickedness and Folly, and those who commit them? Or, because they have good Names and Offices, which are to be honour'd, are they to be honour'd for abusing those good Things, and for turning Good into Evil?

We must deserve Reverence before we claim it. If a Man occupies an honourable Office, civil or sacred, and acts ridiculously or knavishly in it, do I dishonour that Office by contemning or exposing the Man who dishonours it? Or ought I not to scorn him, as much as I reverence his Office, which he does all he can to bring into Scorn? I have all possible Esteem for Quality; but if a Man of Quality acts like an Ape, or a Clown, or a Pick-pocket, or a Profligate, I shall heartily hate or despise his Lordship, notwithstanding my great Reverence for Lords. I honour Episcopacy; but if a Bishop is an Hypocrite, a Time-server, a Traytor, a Stock-Jobber, or an Hunter after Power, I shall take leave to scorn the Prelate, for all my Regard for Prelacy. It is not a Name, however awful, nor an Office, however important, that ought to bring, or can bring, Reverence to the Man who possesses them, if he acts below them, or unworthily of them. Folly and Villany ought to have no Asylum; nor can Titles sanctify Crimes, however, they may sometimes protect Criminals. A Right Honourable or a Right Reverend Rogue, is the most dangerous Rogue, and consequently the most detestable.

S I R,

WE have had a World of Talk both in our Pulpits and our Addresses, about Hereditary Right, and I think no one has yet fully explained what it means; and therefore I will try whether I can unfold or cut asunder the Gordian Knot. It is a divine, unalterable, indefeasible Right to Sovereignty, dictated or modified by the positive Laws, and human Constitutions of national Governments. In France, Turkey, and the large Eastern Monarchies, it descends wholly upon the Males.

In

In the Kingdom, or rather Queendom of Achem, it falls only upon Females. In Russia formerly it descended upon all the Males jointly, and it would not operate upon the Females at all. In Poland the Nobility have an human Right to confer Part of this Divine Right, but not all of it, upon whom they please; and in Old Rome the Soldiery often made bold to confer it: But in England and other Countries, all of it falls upon the Male who chanceth to be born first; and so on to the next, according to Priority of Birth; and for want of Males to the eldest Female, contrary to other Inheritances, which descend upon Females equally. However, though this same Right is absolute and unalterable, yet it is often limited and circumscribed by human Laws, which ought not to be transgressed, yet may be transgressed with Impunity, unless it interferes with another Divine Right, which is the Divine Right of the High Clergy. In all other Cases, it is boundless and uncondition'd, though given and accepted upon Conditions.

There is one Circumstance particularly remarkable in the Exercise of this Divine Right; which is, that it may make as bold as it thinks fit with other Divine Right (except as before excepted,) of which we have a late and very pregnant Instance, approved by very good Churchmen, and all our able Divines, who thank'd God publickly for thus exercising it, that is, when the Queen made that honourable Peace which executed it self. Then the unalterable Divine Right of the Dauphin to the Kingdom of Spain was given to his younger.

ger Son, and the undefeasible Divine Right of the present King of Spain, to the Monarchy of France, was assigned over to a younger Branch of the House of Bourbon; and sometime before the Divine Right of the last Emperor to the Spanish Dominions, was given to the present Emperor; and it seems that this alienable, unalienable, indivisible Right, is divisible too. The Divine Right to Sardinia is given to the Duke of Savoy; and of Naples, Sicily, and Flanders, to the Emperor; and of Gibraltar and Port-Mahon to us, as long as we can keep it; which I hope we are now in a fair Way to do; and all the rest of this Divine Right, besides what is thus dispos'd of, remains where it was before, and where it should be.

But there are certain human Ingredients, Experiments, and Operations, which are necessary to attain to this Divine Right. In most Countries, and particularly in our own, the Priests must have a Finger in the Pye; and it will not come down from above, and settle here below, unless they say certain Words over the married Couple, which they alone have the Right to say; but in Turky, India, and other Mahometan and Pagan Countries, (heu Pudor,) this same Divine Right is to be got without the Benefit of their Clergy, and it will make its Conveyance through the Channel of a Strumpet; yet in most Nations all is not well, unless the Clergy say Grace over it; but then it is of no Consequence who gets the Divine Babe, so he is born in Wedlock; and in a late Instance it appear'd no ways necessary whether he was born in Wedlock, or not, or of whom he was born, so he was but born at all. Now, Sir, you must know, that this is a Mystery, and like some other Mysteries, wholly inexplicable, yet may be explained by the Jacobite Clergy; but then you are not to understand the Explication, but are to take their Words for it; and we all know that they are Men of Probity, and will not deceive you. From this Divine Right all other Rights are deriv'd, except their own, which comes down from above too; and if the Possessors of these two Divine Rights can agree together, all is as it should be; otherwise, you are to take Notice, that God is to be obeyed before Man, and the Regale is to bow down, like the Sheaves in Joseph's Dream, before the Pontificate.

But this is not all: There are some Circumstances very particular and chicane in this Divine Right; though, as has been said, it may be conveyed away, yet nothing passes by the Conveyance in many Cases: Part of it may be granted and conceded to its Subjects, and yet they have no Right to keep what is so given, always excepting the High-Clergy, who may take it without being given: I had almost forgot another Conveyance of this Right, which is Conquest, or, in other Words, the Divine Right of Plunder, Rapine, Massacre: But the Right is never the worse for the Wickedness of Men; for howsoever they get Possession of Sovereign Power, eo instante, the Right is annexed to the Possession, unless in special Cases, still preserving a Right to the Jacobite Clergy, to give a Right to whomsoever they else please. This same Right is of so odd and bizarre a Nature, that it receives no Addition or Diminution from the Consent of Men, or the Want of that Consent. It is lawful to swear to it, when there is an Interest in doing so ; and yet it is no ways necessary to believe what you swear, or keep your Oath. It is not to be resisted ; and yet in particular Cases it may be opposed. It is limited, and yet unlimitable. You may make Laws to bind it, and yet it is Treason and Damnation to defend those Laws, unless you have the Verbum Sacerdotis on your Side.

What Contradictions, Absurdities, and Wickedness, are Men capable of ! We have a Set of abandoned Wretches amongst our selves, who seem to have a Design to destroy human Race, as they would human Reason ! Every Doctrine, every Opinion they advance, is levelled against the Happiness of all Mankind. Nothing conduces to Virtue, to true Religion, to the present or future Interests of Men, but is represented as destructive to Piety. We are to be the Vassals of Tyrants, the Dupes of Impostors, the Zanies of Mountebanks, or else are in a State of Damnation. Men, for whose Sakes Government was instituted, have no Right to be protected by Government : Religion which was given by Almighty God to make Men virtuous here, and happy hereafter ; has been made use of to destroy their Happiness both here, and hereafter. Scarce any thing is discover'd to be true in Nature and Philosophy, but is proved to be false in Ortho-

Orthodoxy: What is found to be beneficial to Mankind in their present State is represented hurtful to their future; nay, some are risen up amongst us, who are such implacable Enemies to their whole Species, that they make it Sin to take proper Precautions against the Danger of the Small-Pox, even when they are advised by the most able Physicians, and when these Physicians are most disinterested.

What can be more cruel, wicked and detrimental to human Society, or greater Blasphemy against the good God; than to make Government, which was design'd by him to render Men numerous, industrious, useful to one another, to improve Arts, Sciences, Learning, Virtue, Magnanimity and true Religion, an unnatural Engine to destroy the greatest Part of the World; to make the rest poor, ignorant, superstitious and wicked; to subject them like Cattle, to be the Property of their Oppressors; to be the tame Slaves of haughty and domineering Masters, and the low Homagers of gloomy Pedants; to work for, to fight for, and to adore those who are neither better nor wiser than themselves; and to be wretched by Millions, to make one or a few proud and insolent? And yet we are told this is the Condition God has placed us in, and that it is Damnation to strive to make it better.

All these Mischiefs, and many more, are the inseparable Consequences of an indefeasible Hereditary Right, in any Man or Family whatsoever, which can never be alienated or forfeited: For if this be true, then the Property of all Mankind may be taken away, their Religion overturn'd, and their Persons butcher'd by Thousands, and no Remedy be attempted: They must not mutter and complain; for Complaints are Sedition, and tend to Rebellion: They must not stand upon their Defence, for that is resisting the Lord's Anointed: They must not revile the Ministers and Instruments of his Power; for Woe be to the Man who speaketh ill of him whom the King honoureth. And all this has been told us by those who have never shewn any Regard to Authority, either human or divine, when it interfer'd with their own Interests. What shall I say; what Words use to express this monstrous Wickedness, this utter Absence of all Virtue, Religion, or Tenderness to the human Species: What Colours can paint it, what Pen describe it!

Certainly, if Government was design'd by God for the Good, Happiness, and Protection of Men, Men have a Right to be protected by Government; and every Man must have a Right to defend what no Man has a Right to take away. There is not now a Government subsisting in the World, but took its Rise from the Institution of Men; and we know from History when, and how, it was instituted: It was either owing to the express or tacit Consent of the People, or the Soldiers, who first erected it; and it could have no more Power than what they gave it; and what Persons soever were invested with that Power, must have accepted it upon the Conditions ditions upon which it was given; and when they renounced those Conditions, they renounced their Government. In some Countries it was Hereditary; in others elective; in some discretionary; in others limited: But in all, the Governors must have deriv'd their Authority from the Consent of Men, and could exercise it no farther than that Consent gave them Leave. Where positive Conditions were annexed to their Power, they were certainly bound by those Conditions; and one Condition must be annexed to all Governments, even the most absolute, That they act for the Good of the People; for whose Sake alone there is any Government in the World. In this Regard there can be no Difference between hereditary and elective Monarchies; for the Heir cannot inherit more than his Ancestor enjoy'd, or had a Right to enjoy, any more than a Successor can succeed to it.

Then the wise Question will arise, What if any Man, who has no natural Right, nor any Right over his Fellow Creatures, accepts great Powers, immense Honours and Revenues, and other personal Advantages to himself and his Posterity, upon Conditions either express, as in all limited Constitutions, or implied as in all Constitutions whatsoever; and either by deliberate Declarations, or deliberate Actions, publicly proclaims, that he will no longer be bound by those Conditions, that he will no more abide by his legal Title, but will assume another that was never given him, and to which he can have no Right at all; that he will govern his People by despotick Authority;

thority; that instead of protecting them, he will destroy them; that he will overturn their Religion, to introduce one of his own; and that instead of being a Terror to evil Works, he will be a Terror to good: I ask, in such a Case, Whether his Subjects will be bound by the Conditions he has renounc'd? Do the Obligations subsist on their Part, when he has destroy'd them on his? And are they not at Liberty to save themselves, and to look out for Protection elsewhere, when it is denied where they have a Right to expect and demand it, and to get it as they can, though at the Expence of him and his Family, when no other Method or Recourse is left.

And now, O ye gloomy Imposters! O ye merciless Advocates for Superstition and Tyranny! Produce all your Texts, all your knotty Distinctions! Here exert all your quaint Eloquence, your Quiddities, your Aliquo modo fit, and Aliquo modo non; appear in solemn Dump, with your reverential Robes, and your horizontal Hats, with whole Legions of Phantoms and Chimera's, and Cart-loads of Theology, broken Oaths, and seditious Harangues, and try whether you can maintain the Battle, and defend the Field against one single Adversary, who undertakes to put all your numerous and fairy Battalions to the Flight.

Let us hear what you can say for your abdicated Idol. Distinguish, if you can, his Case from that which I have represented: Shew that Almighty God gave to him a Divine Right to play the Devil; or, if he had no such Right, that his Subjects had none to hinder hinder him : Prove that Kings are not instituted for the Good of the People, but for their own and the Clergy's Pride and Luxury : But if they are instituted for the Good of the People, then shew that they are left at Liberty to act for their Destruction, and that their Subjects must submit to inevitable Ruin, and yet kiss the Iron Rod whenever his Majesty pleases : Shew that it was possible for the Kingdom to trust themselves again to the Faith and Oaths of a Popish Prince, who, during his whole Reign, did nothing else but break his Faith and his Oaths, and whose Religion oblig'd him to do so ; or that it was possible for them to place his Son upon the Throne he had abdicated, (If they had believ'd him to be his Son,) when he was in the Possession of the most implacable Enemy of their Country, or of Europe, or of the Protestant Religion ; and that it would not have been direct Madness to have sent for him afterwards from France, or Rome, inrag'd by his Expulsion, and educated, animated, and arm'd with French and Popish Principles : And shew too, that the poor oppressed People had any Recourse, but to throw themselves under the Protection of their great Deliverer, who was the next Heir to their Crown.

If you can't do this, there is nothing left for you to do, but to shew, That the late King James did not violate and break the fundamental Laws and Statutes of this Realm, which were the original Contract between him and his People ; and that he did not make their Allegiance to him incompatible with their own Safety, for the Preservation of which he was entitl'd to their Allegiance: Shew that he did not claim and exercise a Power to dispense with their Laws; that he did not levy the Customs without the Authority of Parliament; or that he call'd Parliaments according to the Constitution he had sworn to; and that when he intended to call one, he did not resolve to pack it, and closeted many of the Gentlemen in England, and with Promises and Menaces endeavour'd to make them practicable to his Designs: Shew that he did not disarm Protestants, and arm Papists; set up exorbitant and unlawful Courts; cause excessive Bail to be requir'd, and excessive Fines to be impos'd, and excessive Punishments to be inflicted; that he did not prosecute Members in the King's-Bench for what they did in Parliament; and discharge others committed by Parliament; that he did not grant Fines and Forfeitures of Persons to be try'd, before there Conviction; that he did not erect an Ecclesiastical Commission directly against an Act of Parliament, and suspended, by Virtue of it, Clergymen, for not reading in their Churches a Proclamation, which he issued by his own Authority, to give Liberty of Conscience to Papists and Protestant Dissenters: Shew that he did not imprison and try seven Bishops for their humble Petition against it, which Petition they were empower'd by Law to make; that he did not combine with France and Rome to overthrow the establish'd Church, which he was bound to defend, and to introduce another in the Room of it, which was worse than

than none; and, in order to it, brought profess'd Papists into Offices, both Civil and Military, send and receive Ambassadors to and from Rome, who were guilty of High Treason by the Laws of the Land, and bring from thence Swarms of Locusts, to devour and pollute every Thing that it produc'd; turn out the Masters and Fellows of Magdalen-College, against Law, for not doing what they were sworn not to do, and substitute in their room, those who were not qualified by Law to be there: And to make good all these Breaches upon our Liberties, that he did not raise a Popish Army in Ireland, and another in England, which had many Papists in it, without Authority of Parliament.

Shew, if you can, that he ever discovered the least Inclination to reform these Abuses; but on the contrary, when he could continue them no longer, that he did not desert his People; that he dared to trust himself to a free Parliament, after he had called it, but dissolved it again, and foolishly threw his great Seal into the Thames, that no other might be called; and that when he resolved to leave his People, that he would suffer his Pretended Son to remain amongst us. Shew that you your selves did not help to expel him; that you have not taken Oaths, repeated Oaths to this Government, and Abjurations of any other; and that you have kept to either one or the other. When you have done this, I will allow you to be what no one at present thinks you to be, honest Men, good Englishmen, and true Protestants.

I am, &c.

HORATIUS to CATO.

S I R,

I Have had a long Ambition to say something about you one Way or another ; but I doubted whether I had best write to you, or against you. That Doubt is now decided ; and, lo ! I, who might have been your Adversary, am become your Correspondent and Advocate. I send you your Apology, and shew you the Good you do.

You have, Sir, open'd a new Source of Provision for the Poor, by finding Employment for all the Wits Mendicant about Town : And tho' they ought to reverence your Name, as that of another Sutton, by whose Alms they are sustain'd, yet they vilely fly in your Face, and pollute, by their matchless Ingratitude, the very Bread which you generously put into their Mouths ; like Maggots, who prey upon the Flesh they are bred in, till they turn Flies, which are Vermin with Wings. Thus Reprobates serve Heaven ; they affront and blaspheme it, and receive their Existence from it. You scarce had appear'd in the World, but you recall'd superannuated Authors to Life again ; and Toothless, as they were, set them a biting, biting at the Hand that brought them back from Oblivion. Obsolete and despairing,

sparing Authors once more violently grasp'd their Pen: The lean and ill-fed Candidates, for Weekly Work from the Booksellers, brighten'd up, and began to be cloath'd; and puny Poets, and the humble Composers of Ditties, left their Tags and Ballads to live upon Cato; even those, who had got some Reputation, thought they had now a lucky Opportunity to improve it, by breaking a Lance with a Champion who drew all Eyes upon him, and was yet invincible: And Cato became at once the Butt of the Envious, the Mark of the Ambitious, and the Stay and Support of the Needy.

It is the Lot of Grandeur: A great Man must have his poor and impertinent Dependents, as well as is useful and agreeable: They all serve to make up his Train. A Troop of Beggars besetting his Coach, or following it in the Street, do, notwithstanding their Rags, and ill-favour'd Looks, and dismal Style, but add to the Lustre of his Figure. Jesters and Buffoons, Cynicks and Declaimers, are likewise of the same Use, to swell his Pomp, and divert him, tho' they are often too free with him. Your Retinue, Sir, of this Kind is infinite: From the Cockpit to Moorfields you maintain a Wag, an Orator, a Critick, a Poet, or a Journalist, in every Street, and whole Swarms in the Alleys: Nor would I desire a surer Patent for Fame, than such a Shoal of Calumniators. Their Scolding is Compliment; and while they aim Blows at you, they only cudgel themselves on your Behalf;

half; offendent solido; you know the Fable of the Viper biting the File.

Envy always praises those it rails at. It is indeed the only Way that foul Mouths can make your Panegyrick, or that of any Man. Were they to extol you in earnest, it would be downright Scandal and Railing; a foul Conspiracy against your Reputation; like the Fawning of a Whelp, who, to express his Fondness, pisses upon you. If therefore they mean their Scurrilities and satirical Nonsense in Love, you would have ground for Provocation: But to mean them as they do, the contrary Way, is their only genuine Way of thanking you for their Food. There are many Sorts of Folks whose Calumnies I would be proud of, for the same Reason why I would be ashamed of their Praise. A great Man at Athens, was followed from a publick Assembly all the Way home, by a very competent Reviler, with a World of Panegyrical ill Names, and acceptable Abuses. That great Man took all these kind Vollies of Defamation, for so many Huzzas; and calling to his Servant, Go, says he, take a Light, and conduct that worthy Gentleman, who has honour'd me with all those civil Acclamations, home to his Lodging.

Now if this ill-tongu'd Athenian had not been in earnest, his Courtesy would have been half lost. I hope your numerous Answerers and Revilers mean what they say, else the Obligation is but small; and the smaller, because these their Panegyricks upon you, are not at all encourag'd. The Town is still profoundly ignorant what a Swarm of Retailers, what

what loud and vehement Flatterers you have in it. They have filled, and do Weekly fill, mighty Reams of Paper in extolling you, as great a Secret as the World would make of it, to use the Words of a witty Author.

Love, they say, is blind; and perhaps from hence may be fetch'd a Proof, that these your pretended Adversaries are your real Friends, since in their Writings against you, that is, for you, (for it is all one) they are guided by no other Rule of Right and Wrong, than, whether Cato affirms a Thing or denies it, and are always sure to take the contrary Side: Nay, some of them contradict Cato, at the Expence of their constant and favourite Opinions. Does not this look like playing Booty? By their Works, one would think that you had the licensing of your Opponents, and, but for their hideous Bulk, the overlooking of them: At least, by your profound Silence, and great Meekness towards them, you seem well pleased with their Labours. I dare say, you would not change them for any Set of Defamers that could be pick'd up for you.

A Lady of my Acquaintance is fond of Dogs. She has at present two or three little Curs, that are very noisy at every Visitant who is taller than ordinary. The puny Vermin have a Spite at Elevation. They once, particularly, made an incessant and stand'rous Clamour at a Noble Lord, well known for his fine Person and graceful Mein; nor could they be still'd. The Lady was out of Countenance: She told him she would have them knock'd on the Head, or given away: By no means, means, Madam, says his Lordship, sagely enough, I know you cannot be without Dogs, and perhaps the next may bite me.

I think I have read you impartially, and cannot say I have found in you any knavish Reasoning, any base or dishonest Principles. You need not therefore be concern'd who writes against you. However, as I would trust nobody in any Circumstances, with any Sort of absolute Power, methinks I should not be displeas'd to see you check'd and watch'd a little in that great Authority you have acquir'd over the Minds of Men. No Body has shewn us better than your self, that all discretionary Power is liable to be abus'd, and ought not to be trusted, or cautiously trusted, to mortal and frail Men. For this Reason, tho' you are Monarch of the Press, I would have you a limited Monarch: As such it becomes you to bear with, and receive kindly the Admonitions and Remonstrances of Men of Honour and Sense, when such differ with you, and it is agreeable to your Sense and Character, to laugh at the profane Contumelies of Slaves. Your Calumniators do your Business. The Viper carries within it a Remedy for its own Poison. You are secure by the Baseness of their Fears, against the Baseness of their Malice; and their Malice is harmless by being obvious.

There is something diverting in the Number and Variety of your Adversaries, and their different Views. Some are old Stagers; and being us'd to spill Ink for Pay in the Quarrel of Parties, made an Offer of themselves to enter ter the Lists again, and scold for Wages at Cato. The Finances were not in Cato's Disposal: This was a good and conscientious Reason for being against him. But these Volunteers are not suitably encourag'd. One of them has in two Years writ near a Dozen Pamphlets against you; but with ill Success every Way. The Town will not buy them; the other End of the Town will not reward the Author; nor will you take any Notice of them. A melancholy Case! That learned Oxonian is at present in the Slough of Despond.

Others, who had not been us'd to receive Pay, and I doubt never will, thought themselves qualified to earn it: For, alas! what is so deceiving as Self-love? So upon Cato they fell, and by way of Answer crack'd Jest, and call'd him Names. Fraught with this Merit, away they footed it sweating to the Office, where, after many Petitions, and much waiting, they were admitted to the Audience of one of the Clerks. They begg'd to be consider'd as humble Auxiliaries, and to have an Acknowledgment, the smallest Acknowledgment. These Gentlemen had better Luck than the above ancient Author: They were fully rewarded, that is to say, they were civilly thank'd by the aforesaid Clerk, and own'd to be well-meaning Persons. And yet they are ungrateful, and make heavy Complaints, as if they had nothing. They still hope for more another Time.

A Bookseller of my Acquaintance tells me, that he has refus'd, within this Year, five and fifty fifty Pamphlets writ against you, and that the Authors, one and all, offer'd to write for him by the Year. They were all of Opinion, that they could carry through a Weekly Paper with as much Reputation and Success as any yet writ against you: Which he did not deny; and yet dismiss'd them. He told me, it was but this Winter, that a Man in a Livery came to him, and asked him, What he would give for a Sermon to be preach'd by his Master, the Doctor, upon a publick Occasion? He answer'd, Nothing. Oh, Sir, says the Valet, my Master's will sell like Wildfire. You can't think, Sir, how purely he claws off Cato; And you'll see he'll soon be made a—— You see, Sir, that you are a useful Man to many, and even consider'd as a Scale to great Preferment. This Sermon is since out, and it has neither hurt you, nor exalted the Preacher, tho' he has there labour'd the Point very hard. The Doctor wanted no good Will, whatever else he wants. Unluckily for him, there is not an Argument (I should have said Assertion) used by him against Writing, but what will bear fifty times as strongly against Preaching. I'll, however, acquit him from meaning this Consequence, or any other but that which his Man meant, and which seems a Consequence at least extremely remote. The Doctor is, indeed, admirable: While he thought himself haranguing, and scattering Words against Libelling, he was actually inveighing virulently against himself, and preaching an angry Libel against Preaching. May the Press and Liberty be ever bless'd with such Foes. The Doctor does not want want Words ; it is Pity but he knew the Use of them.

Says Mr. Bayes, in the Rehearsal, I bring out my Bull and my Bear ; and what do you think I make them do, Mr. Johnson ?

Johnson. Do ! why, fight, I suppose.

Bayes. See how you are mistaken now ! I would as soon make them dance ; no, igad, Sir, I make them do no earthly Thing.

There is this Difference between the Doctor's Bull, and Mr. Bayes's Bull ; the Doctor's Bull bellows ; besides this, he does no earthly Thing neither.

Pray, Sir, be not so proud and lazy, — read some of your Adversaries, and their Bulls will divert you.

Methinks, as great a Man as the World takes you to be, and as you may think your self, you treat your intended Adversaries, but real Friends, too superciliously, and, I conceive, with too much Contempt. I am told by some of your intimate Friends, that you have never read any of their Works, and yet, to my Knowledge, several of them please themselves with having mortified you, and do themselves no small Credit amongst their Acquaintance by bragging of it. Give, Sir, your poor Retainers, this Consolation, since they are like to have no other : Consider them as Brats of your own begetting, and since you have brought them into the World, that you ought to support them. Your taking but the least Notice of them, and their Performances, will give them Food and Raiment : But I will beg leave to say, it is very unnatural, when you have have given Birth to so many innocent and harmless Creatures, to leave them afterwards to starve. You see, Sir, that they want no Industry or Application, and 'tis not their Fault if they want Success. Take, generous Cato, a little Notice of them, and I am sure they will gratefully acknowledge your Indulgence. Read, O Cato! their Labours, and condescend to throw away a few leisure Hours in contemplating the Imbecility of human Nature. It becomes the greatest Men to know the weak Sides of it as well as the strong; at least you will learn this Lesson by it, That

Man differs more from Man, than Man from Beast.

Give me leave to conclude with a Story : Once upon a Time, I saw a brave large Bull, of great Comeliness and Dignity, brought out upon a Green near a Country Village to be baited. Among the Bull-Dogs fetch'd to bait him, were seen several dirty, deform'd Currs, call'd House-Dogs, that vented all their Choler in filthy Noise. They bark'd aloud and bitterly, and disturb'd every Body but the Bull, who, at all their snapping, sniveling, and snarling, never turned his Head, nor mov'd a Foot or a Horn. At last the Squire of the Place, who presid'd at the Entertainment, shew'd himself a Man of Taste and Equity. Take away, says he, with a Voice of Authority, take away these yelping Mungrels : We do not use to bait Bulls with Turnspits.

I am, S-I R,

Your Humble Servant,

H O R A T I U S.

S I R,

I Intend to consider in this Paper, the Behaviour and Spirit of the Conspirators, and to shew what Enemies they are, even to such as are favourable to them. But, before I proceed to enquire into the avowed Causes of all this outrageous Disaffection, I will freely own, that many Things have been done which cannot be justified; some, perhaps, ignorantly, many ambitiously, and others, it is to be feared, traiterously, to help the Conspirators, by provoking the People, and by rendring the Administration odious. Sure I am, there are many pregnant Appearances that look sadly this Way, and can be construed no other Way; and these Measures gave much Sorrow and Indignation to the best Friends of the Government, as I doubt not but they did Pleasure and Hopes to the disaffected, who saw how fast by such Steps their Views were advanced. Treason is most successfully carried on by unsuspected Traytors, as Friends are easiest betray'd and undone by Friends. The Cry therefore of the Conspirators against unpopular Proceedings, was all Hypocrisy, and false Fire: They saw their mischievous Influence, and rejoiced in it: They thought they were saved the Danger and Trouble of Plotting; and that all they had to do, was to hold the Match ready, while other People were laying the Train; and to put their Sickle into a Harvest not of their own sowing. How near they were to reaping this Harvest, is now apparent.

Match

Every good Man will condemn unjust Measures, let them come from what Quarter they will. But the Conspirators could not with a good Grace condemn the worst, even supposing the Resentment sincere. The wildest and wickedest Things done by their own Party, have been constantly and zealously defended and promoted by them: And they have steadily acted for or against a Party from Passion or Faction. Nor has the Love of their Country, and the Good of the Whole, separated from Party, ever sway'd them in one publick Action, that I remember. Neither is it any Defence of them, that others, who profess'd larger, and more human and publick Principles, have fallen too often into the same Partiality, and been too often govern'd by the same narrow, selfish, and passionate Spirit. Who have ever sworn more blindly in Verba Magistri than the Conspirators? Who have ever more notoriously shewn, that they knew no other Measures of Right and Wrong, of Religion and Impiety, than the Measures espous'd or oppos'd by their own Leaders? What Jobb has been so vile, that they have not blindly approv'd? Or what Scheme so just, that they have not fiercely condemn'd? Just as this Scheme, or that Jobb has taken its Rise from this or that Quarter.

Nor

Nor was the Spirit of Faction ever more manifest, than in the present Conspiracy: What did the Conspirators want, but Plunder and Places? But what Advantages was their Country to reap from the violent Change, which they were bringing upon it? Before they could have accomplish'd it, the Nation and every Thing in it must have been thrown into Convulsions, and a Chaos. What Order could they bring out of this Confusion? What Amends could they make for unsettled or plundered Property, a Trade stagnated or lost, Harvests destroyed, contending Armies, Bloodshed, Slaughter and Battles, general Desolation, universal Terror, every Man's Sword against his Neighbour, and the foreign Sword against all, and dyed with the Blood of Britons, and his Majesty depos'd, and perhaps butcher'd? For it could not be possible, even for them to suppose, that his Majesty and his Family, possess'd of so much Power in his Native Dominions, supported by such Numbers, such Wealth and Dependances in Great Britain, and by so many powerful Allies abroad, could be effectually expelled by their bigotted Idol, and his Champions, but after a long and fatal Civil War, fought within our Bowels: A War in which most of the contending Powers of Europe would have been Parties, and which must have ended in the utter Loss of our Liberties, which ever Side had prevailed.

In Answer to this black Catalogue of Woes, will they urge that England and English Liberty, and the Protestant Religion, would have been indeed destroyed; but that they, the Conspirators, would have had Places? And yet what else can they urge? For this is the Sum of their Reasoning, whatever Disguises they would put upon it. Such was their Spirit; and I wish it were as new as it is shocking and horrible. But alas! it is as old as Men: And every Country upon Earth, that has been undone, has been undone to satiate the Ambition of one, or a few, who aimed at seizing or extending Power.

Con-

The Complaints of Miscarriages, of wrong Steps, and Abuse of Power, came awkwardly and absurdly from their Mouths, whatever Grounds there may have been for such Complaints. What Security could the Conspirators give us, that, contrary to the Nature of Man, and of Power, and to their own Nature and Conduct, they themselves would be humble in Grandeur, and modest in Exaltation, and occupy Power with Moderation, Self-denial, and clean Hands? They, who would overturn the Constitution, and the Foundations of the Earth, and fill the Land with Violence, War and Blood, to come at that Power! Can we conceive it possible that any Regard to the Publick Good, and to Publick Property, would have the least Influence over those Men, who would sacrifice the Publick, and annihilate all Property, for the Gratification of personal Ambition and Rage? Or how should the Love of Liberty and Peace bind these Men, whom neither the Laws of Humanity, and of their Country, nor the Religion of an Oath, nor the awful Gospel of Jesus Christ, can in the least bind?

They

They exclaim against Armies and Taxes, and are the Cause of both, and rail at Grievances of their own creating. Who make Armies necessary, but they, who would invade, and enslave, or destroy us by Armies, foreign Popish Armies? Who make Taxes necessary, but they, who by daily conspiring against our Peace and our Property, and against that Establishment which secures both, force us to give Part to save all? And who, but they, can give a Handle and Pretence to such as delight in Taxes and Armies, and prosper by them, to continue and increase them? They are not only the Authors of those great Grievances, but of all the Evils and subsequent Grievances which proceed from them. Had the Conspirators succeeded, can we think, or will they have the Face to say, that they would have rul'd without Armies? The Yoke of Usurpation and Servitude is never to be kept on without the Sword. They who make Armies necessary now, would have found them necessary then: Nor would they have ridiculously and madly trusted to their Merit and popular Conduct, when in this very Instance they shew that no Means were too black, no Pitch of Iniquity and Cruelty too horrid, for the Accomplishment of their Treason; and general Plunder and Devastation, Conflagrations and Murder, were the concerted Specimens of their Spirit, and to be the hopeful Beginnings of their Reign. Did King James, whose Misfortunes they caus'd and lament, did he, or could he, pretend to support this Religion, and his arbitrary Administration, without the Violence of the Sword, and without a great and a Popish Army? Is the Pretender of a different Religion, or more moderate in the same Religion? Or does he disavow his Father's Government, and propose a better and a milder of his own? Does he pretend to come, or to stay here without Armies? And are not Governments continued, and must be, by the same Means by which they were founded? A Government begun by Armies and the Violation of Property, must be continu'd by Armies, Oppression and Violence.

What is here said of Taxes and Armies may be said of the Suspension of the Habeas Corpus Act. They complain of the Suspension as a heavy Evil; and by their incessant Plots and Rebellions, make long and frequent Suspensions inevitable. By their eternal Designs and Attacks upon us, they force us upon the next Means of Self-preservation; and then complain of Oppression, because we will not suffer them to oppress and destroy us. It is therefore owing to them, that the Subject is taken from under the Protection of the common Law, and left to the Discretion of the Court. Who says that this is desirable? But who makes it necessary, or gives a Pretence for it?

We were all justly fill'd with the Apprehension of losing Gibraltar, and thought that no Doom was too bad for the Traytor that had agreed to give it up, (if there ever was such a Traytor in his Majesty's Service;) and the Conspirators exclaim'd as loudly as any. But behold their Baseness and Insincerity in this, as in other Complaints, and their extensive Enmity to their Country in every Instance! By the Conspiracy it appears, that they labour'd with foreign Powers to have Gibraltar taken from Great Britain, on purpose to enrage the Nation to part with their Government and their Religion, in Resentment for the Loss of that single, tho' important Fortress.

The late Management of the South-Sea was another Topick of Resentment and Complaint, and a just one, whatever unjust Uses the Conspirators made of it. It is reasonable to believe, that in their Hearts they rejoyc'd in it, since from the universal Displeasure, Confusion, and Losses, occasion'd by it, and from the Bitterness caus'd by those Losses, they drew Hopes and a good Omen to their Conspiracy, which else must have been impotent and languishing. The tender and slow Prosecution of the execrable Managers, the gentle Punishment inflicted upon them, and the obvious Difficulties thrown in the Way of any Punishment at all, were fresh Provocations to a plunder'd and abus'd Nation, and fresh Stimulations to the Conspirators. They saw, that great Numbers, who had always hated them and their Pretender, were now, under their heavy Misfortunes, and in the present Agonies of their Soul, brought to think not unkindly of him and his Cause, or to be entirely indifferent about it. They said they were undone, and could not be worse undone, and that nothing in human Shape, or in any Shape, could use them so ill as the Directors had; the execrable, rich, and unhang'd Directors!

But

But of all Men, it least became the Conspirators to be noisy about the hellish Management of the South-Sea Scheme ; since one of the first and most certain Consequences of the Conspiracy, would have been the utter Ruin of the whole South-Sea Stock, and of all the many Thousands who have their Property in it. The Bank, and all other publick Funds, would have had the same Fate ; nay, one of the first Steps would have been the plundering of the Bank, and the Seizure of all the Books of the great Companies.

This was so much the Design of the Conspirators, that one Reason given by themselves for delaying the Execution of the Plot, was, that a principal Conspirator, who had a great deal of Stock, might have Time to sell out. So that they who did so virtuously and disinterestedly exclaim against the Abuse of publick Credit, would have sunk and destroyed for ever, not only the publick Funds, but the Foundation of all publick Credit, and publick Happiness, publick and private Property.

The Conspirators likewise profess a loud Zeal and Concern for the Church ; and Papists, Nonjurors, and perjured Traytors, were to deliver a Protestant Church from a Protestant Government, which protected her, to be better protected by a Popish Bigot, and his Popish Monks, who all think her damned. A Zeal therefore for the Church, was to justify the most hideous Impieties, a general Perjury, foreign Invasions, and the final Overthrow of all Liberty, Virtue, and Religion : The reformed Church of England was, for a protecting Father, to be surrendered to a Nurfing of the Pope's, who by his Religion is, and must be, a determin'd Enemy to the whole Reformation in general, and to the Church of England in particular; and is under the Menaces and Horrors of Damnation, if he does not exert his whole Policy and Power to extirpate the Protestant Name, and introduce a Religion which is worse than none, as it professedly tolerates no other, and persecutes Conscience, which is the Source and Seat of Religion, the only Source that any Religion can have. While there are Men and Societies of Men, there will be Religion; and where Dread and Tyranny are taken away, different Religions; and yet no Religion is preferable to a cruel Religion; a Religion that curses and oppresses Toleration, which is a Principle inseparable from Christianity; a Religion which buries the Bible, or burns it, and all that read it, and damns all Meekness and Mercy; a Religion that defaces the Creation, cheats, impoverishes, oppresses, and exhausts human Race, and arms its Apostles with Jails, Tortures, Gibbets, Impostures, and a bloody Knife.

Every other Complaint of the Conspirators, might with the same Facility and Truth be turned upon them. But this Paper is already too long. I will therefore conclude with observing, that the Conspirators have by the Assistance of malicious Calumnies, blind Prejudices, gross Ignorance, and constant Misrepresentations, misled and abus'd their Party, and governed them by abusing them. That they have wickedly taught them to hate a Government, which, with all the Faults, true or false, that their worse Malice can charge it with, does just as far excel that which they would introduce, as the Blessings and Beauties of Liberty transcend the horrid Deformities of Slavery, and the implacable and destroying Spirit of Papish Tyranny. That they have wickedly taught them to be weary of their present free Condition ; which, with all its Disadvantages, Debts, and Taxes, is easy and happy, greatly and conspicuously happy, in Comparison of any Condition of any People under any Papish Prince now upon Earth. That they have, by perpetual Delusion and Lies, work'd them to a Readiness, nay, a Passion, to venture and sacrifice their whole Property, rather than pay a Part to secure the Whole ; and to wish for a Revolution, a Romish Revolution, which will neither leave them their Property, their Conscience, nor their Bible !

I am, &c.

S I R,

I HAVE in my last considered the Spirit of the Conspirators in general : I will in this address my self to those of the Clergy, who have joined with them, or are well affected to them. That there are some such, no
Body

Body doubts; and our Enemies boast, I hope unjustly, of a great Majority: But let them be many, or few, none can be affected by what is hereafter said, but those to whom it is applicable.

I shall not here urge the sacred Ties you are under; Ties sufficient to bind any Conscience, which is not past all Tenderneſs and Sense of Feeling; Ties awful and solemn enough to restrain Minds that any Religion can restrain; and Ties from which no lawless Breach of the Coronation-Oath, nor any Act of Tyranny, has disengag'd you; tho', according to your own Doctrines, your peculiar and favourite Doctrine, so often thundered in the Ears of Englishmen, No Act nor Acts of Tyranny can dissolve the Bonds of Allegiance. But I would reason with you upon the Point of more Weight and Moment with you, your secular State and Interest.

Pray what Violence has been offered to your Dignities and Immunities? What Breach made upon your Livings and Revenues? What Good has been done to Religion at your Expence? What arbitrary Indulgences have been granted to Dissenters, or legal ones, besides that of worshipping God? Is it a Sin against you, to suffer them to exercise Religion in a Way different from you, when every Man who worships God, must worship him his own Way, in the Way which he thinks God will accept, else he cannot worship him at all? What other Worship will God accept, but that which Conscience dictates? Every other Worship is Hypocrisy; which is worse than a false Religion, gion, proceeding from a good Conscience. He who complies with a Religion, which he condemns or despises, worships not God, but the Pride of Priests; and is therefore their Friend and Favourite; while the upright Man who adores his God in spite of them, and will not dissemble in so nice and sacred a Point, is a Capital Foe. The Religion of one's Country, to any Man who dislikes it, is Cant, and no more than the Religion of Lapland. Besides, would your own Pride suffer any of you to comply with the Religion of Scotland, or Geneva, if you were there? On the contrary, do you not constantly encourage there, what you constantly exclaim against as Schism here, a Separation from the establish'd Communion?

The State which makes you what you are, and gives you what you have, may by the same Right and Power confer what Favours, Privileges, and Bounties it pleases upon any other different Bodies of Men: Nor could you in Modesty, or Common Sense, complain, that a Legislature dispos'd of its Gifts and Graces according to its own Wisdom and Discretion; and yet you have not even had this. No-provocation. What Dissenter, what Presbyterian, has been preferr'd to the Preferments of the Church, or any other, unless all who are faithful to the Government and to their Oaths, are Dissenters? And will you pay Dissenters this Compliment? None but Churchmen are preferr'd in the Church, or in the State. No Preferments are continued vacant; the Church Revenues are not lessened, nor impaired, but every every Day increas'd. All the usual and legal Advantages of the Church are secure to Churchmen, and none but Churchmen possess them. All their Honours, all their Emoluments are in their Hands, and they are protected in them; nor are any Hardships done them, or suffer'd to be done them, but that of restraining them from putting Hardships, Distresses and Shackles upon others; and that of confining a Bishop, and some of his lower Brethren, for Treason against their God and their Oaths, their Religion and their King. And the outrageous and brutal Resentments they have shewn for this necessary, this legal Proceeding, shew what Friends you are to that Establishment, which maintains and supports you in such Ease, Honours, and Plenty; and which he, and such as he, would have destroyed: You indeed, make it more and more manifest that your greatest Quarrel to the Government, is, that it will not put Swords into your Hands to destroy it. Will you after this, complain that the Government will not particularly distinguish you, you only, and your deluded Party, with Honour, Trust, and Esteem, for this your declared Infidelity and Enmity to the Government.

But the Convocation, you cry, does not fit. This, you think a crying Evil: But before we agree with you in this Thought, you ought to shew us what Good their present Sitting would do. And if you would shew too, what Good their Sitting ever did, or ever can do, you would inform many who are in utter Ignorance as to this great Affair. Do

Convocations always, or at any Time promote Peace and Indulgence, and the tender Charity of Christianity? Have their furious Contentions for Ecclesiastical Union ever increas'd Christian Union? Has their Fierceness for Garments and Sounds, and the Religion of the Body and the Breath, had any good Effect upon Humanity, Sincerity, Conscience, and the Religion of the Soul? Have not some of them, and some not very late ones, gone to open War with Moderation and common Sense; and with such as only offended by reconciling Religion with Moderation and common Sense? And by proving that our Saviour lyed not, when he declared that his Kingdom was not of this World? How did the late Convocation particularly, and their Champions, agree with their Head and Saviour, the great Bishop of Souls, upon this Article? Will such as you say, that for the Interest of this Government, the Convocation ought to sit? And ought it to sit for any other Interest? Be so good to lay before us the Services done, and the Instances of Zeal shewn, by the late Convocations, to this Protestant Establishment.

Another of your common-place Cries is, That the Clergy are contemn'd. What Clergy, Gentlemen? Are any contemn'd but the Profane, the Forsworn, the Rebellious, the Lewd, the Turbulent, the Insatiable, the Proud, and the Persecuting, such as will be unavoidably contemn'd, and ought to be contemn'd by all that have Conscience, Virtue, Loyalty, and common Honesty? And will you say that the Clergy, or the

the Body of the Clergy, feel, or ought to feel this Contempt? Why should the just Doom of the Traytors of their Order affect the Credit of the Clergy, or fill with Apprehensions such as are not Traytors? If they hate their Crimes, what Credit or Respect is due to the Criminal? And if any of them respect the Crime, what Respect is due to them from those who abhor Traytors and Treason, which all good Men abhor?

Your little Regard to Conscience, and your wanton Contempt of Oaths, are sad Proofs how small Power the Christian Religion, or any Religion, has over you. What can bind the Man whom Oaths cannot bind? Can Society have any stronger Hold of him? And are not they Enemies to Society, and to Mankind; they who violate all the Bonds by which Societies subsist, and by which Mankind are distinguish'd from wild Beasts? You boast of your Succession from the Apostles. Do you do as the Apostles did? Or would they have deserv'd that venerable Name, or found Credit amongst Men, or made one Convert from Heathenism, if they had been the ambitious Disturbers of Government; and by profanely trampling upon Oaths, had publish'd to the World, by their Practice, an atheistical Contempt of all Conscience and religious Restraints? The Apostles, rather than disown their Faith and Opinion, and dissemble a lying Regard for the Gentile Deities, for a Moment, were miserable in their Lives, and Martyrs in their Death; nor could Racks, Wheels, Fire, and all the Engines of Torture and Cruelty, extort from them one hypocritical Declaration, one Profession that their Souls contradicted. Neither they, nor their pious Followers, needed to have been Martyrs, had they been guided by a Spirit that taught Religion and Conscience to stoop to worldly Interest and Luxury.
all

You say; I have heard some of you say, That you are forc'd to swear. How were you forc'd? Can Conscience be forc'd? You may as well say, that Men may be forc'd to like a Religion which they hate. Can any Excuse be an Excuse for Perjury? Were Shadrack, Mesback, and Aod-nego, forc'd to worship Nebuchadnezzar's Golden Image? Were the first Reformers forc'd to adore a Wafer for a God? Was St. Paul to be forc'd to offer Incense, and worship Idols? Or, if he had, would his Preaching been of any Effect, or ought to have been? Either the Gospel condemns the Prostitution of Conscience and Religion to Ease and Interest; or such Prostitution, if the Gospel allow'd it, would condemn the Gospel. You must therefore either renounce the Gospel, which in Practice you do; or condemn your selves, which I do not hear you do: And in Honour to the Christian Religion, the peaceable, the sincere, the conscientious, and disinterested Christian Religion, all Men who are sincere Christians, or only honest Moralists, must condemn you, and abhor your Practices.

But how were you forc'd? Either you must swear Fidelity to a Government which protects tests you, and takes nothing from you, or you must quit the Advantages, and not eat the Bread of the Government; (for that the Government gives you all you have, I am ready to prove whenever you please.) Now if you have really tender Consciences, you would not swear: But if your Tithes and Rents are dearer to you than your Consciences, then it is plain your Consciences are not tender. It is a very harden'd Conscience, that is not dearer to a Man than his Belly. Your Perjury therefore is pure Wantonness, and an utter Absence of all Honesty, Conscience, and Shame. Are these Qualifications proper to direct the Lives and Consciences of others? And to promote in the Minds and Practices of others the scrupulous and upright Religion of our Blessed Saviour?

Cease, for God's sake, to use that Holy Name, or use it better. Can you bring People to him, by shewing you selves daily Apostates from him? Cease mentioning the holy Martyrs, you who are a Disgrace and direct Antipodes to the Martyrs, and the Spirit of Martyrdom, and would make a Martyr of that Religion for which they died. For shame, rail not at Atheism, speak not of Atheists, you who give essential Proofs of the blackest Atheism. What is Atheism, but an utter Disbelief, or, which is really worse, an utter Contempt of the Deity? And what is a stronger Demonstration of that Contempt, than a daring, a practical Contempt of Conscience, his Deputy within us, and a wanton and solemn Invocation of his awful Name to Hypocrisy, erisy, Deceit, and determin'd Falshood? This is making the Godhead a Party to Infidelity, and Treason against himself: It is mocking God, and abusing Men, and making Religion the Means of Damnation. What can equal this horrible Crime, the Root and Womb of all Crimes? Or what Words can describe it? This, Gentlemen, is your Advantage: No Language suffices to paint out your Wickedness: You are secure that your Picture can never be fully drawn, or the World see it in half its Blackness and Deformity.

Will you after this scould at the Morals and Impiety of the Age? You who lay the broadest Foundation for all Immorality and Wickedness, by letting loose the Minds of Men from all the strongest Bonds of Virtue and of human Society, the inviolable Engagements of Conscience, and the Awe of the supreme Being! After you have thus proclaim'd in the most effectual Manner, that you have no Religion, or that Religion has no Power over you, will you continue to fill the World and weak Heads with canting Conjectures and barren Speculations, as if Religion consisted in Whims, Dreams, and Non-entities? And when you have, as far as your Authority and Example go, depriv'd Almighty God of the essential Worship arising from social Virtue, Peace, Charity, and good Conscience towards God and Man, will you be still adding further Indignities to the Deity, be representing him chiefly pleas'd with unmanly Grimaces, Words without Meaning, the Nonsense of Meta-

Metaphysicks, the Jargon of Logick, and the Cant of Mystery?

But this Subject is too long for one Paper: I shall therefore continue it in my next. In some following Letters I shall shew my poor deluded Countrymen by what wretched Guides in Church and State they are conducted, and whose Jobs they are doing, to their own Undoing.

I am, &c.

S I R,

I Proceed in my Address to the Disaffected Part of the Clergy.

Are not you the Men who profess'd such blind, such unconditional Submission to Princes, the most oppressive and tyrannical Princes, and damn'd all who would not go your mad, your impious, and your impracticable Lengths? And are not you the first to bring home your own Damnation to your own Doors, by shewing that no Obligation, human or divine, can withhold you from rebelling against the most legal Government, and mildest Prince? To assert that the Government is not a lawful Government, is to assert your own Perjury; and by disowning the Government, you disown all Honesty and Conscience. The Government is founded upon Reason, upon Laws, and Consent, the only Foundation of any Government; and it is administer'd with Equity, and without the Blemish of Violence, or of dispensing arbitrarily with Laws: And yet this Government is to be resisted, betrayed, and overturned; while a Government, founded upon the Chance of Blood, and upon the hereditary Sufficiency of Men, and successive Chastity of Women; and which acts by Discretion, Cruelty, or Folly, is of divine Appointment, and irresistible. What can be more monstrous? And what capricious and hard-hearted Folly you would fix upon the good and all-wise God? By which you only shew that your hallowed Nonsense, if you are in earnest, is as signal as your Wickedness.

As to the Pretender's Right, I know not what it is; unless it be, That because his suppos'd Father violated his Coronation-Oath and the Laws, usurped a Tyrannical Power, and oppress'd and enslav'd these Nations five and thirty Years ago, therefore his suppos'd Son has a lawful Right to enslave them now. And I defy you, with all your Distinctions, and Men of Distinctions, to produce a better Argument upon this Head of Right. Besides, how can the Pretender think that you have any the least Regard to his Right, when you have so often and so solemnly sworn that he had none? Dispossess you selves, if you can, of the Spirit of Faction, and of groundless Displeasure and Revenge; and then try if you can find any divine, any unalterable Right in the Pretender: He has in truth no Right, but what your own unruly unruly and restless Passions give him. We all know what would cure you of your Opinion of his Title, of your Fondness of his Person. The Constitution will not stoop to you; the Government will not be govern'd by you; you have not the Power; you have not the Revenues of the ancient Ecclesiasticks before Henry VIII's Days; nor would you, if the Pretender was here: And if you had not, in three Months you would be fierce for sending him abroad again, as you did his suppos'd Father; or using him worse. Of this I am certain, that if he rul'd as his present Majesty does, you would treat him, and obey him, and honour him, just as you do his present Majesty. Plead no longer your Consciences, which you have so long, and so often, and so vilely prostituted, and still prostitute! No body will receive the Plea.

Before you can pretend to make your Notions and Authority pass with others, you must shew that you your selves are guided by any Notions of Right or Wrong. If you would clear your selves from the Guilt, the horrid Guilt of constant and repeated Perjury; shew how faithfully, how religiously you have kept your Oaths. If you would not be thought disaffected, shew by some particular Instances your Faith and Attachment to the Government, from the Revolution to this Day. What have you done to prevent or repress Plots, Assassinations, and Rebellions; to render them odious in the Hearts of your People;

ple; or to satisfy the World that they were odious in your own? And is not this the Duty of Christians and Preachers, and your sworn Duty? In a stupid Dispute about Grimace and Forms, or about paltry Distinctions and empty Words, you are all in Flame and Uproar, and fill your Pulpits, and your People, and the Nation with your important Nonsense, and the Danger of Sense: But when Church and State were just going to be swallowed up by Popery and Tyranny, what Allarms have you rung? What Resentment, what Attachment to the Establishment and your Oaths have you shewn? What honest Testimony have you born?

And what have you done, Gentlemen, since the Discovery of this horrid Conspiracy? You that from your lofty Rostrums have scatter'd Poison and epidemical Distempers over the Land, as if out of Pandora's Box; what Antidotes have you applied to the Venom you have dispers'd? What Satisfaction have you made for all the Mischiefs you have done, and which glare you in the Face? What Sermons have you preach'd? What Discourses have you printed? What Detestation have you shewn against this monstrous Design, levell'd at the Life of the Prince who protects you, against the Religion you ought to support, and which supports you, and against the Liberties and Estates of your Contrymen, from whose mistaken Confidence you derive all your Power and Wealth?

What has been done by the Governors of the Universities to promote Loyalty either in Tutors

Tutors or Pupils, and to support the Principles upon which the Revolution stands? What Charges have been given by Archdeacons (to say nothing of their Betters) to enforce Obedience to this Government upon the Foot of Liberty? How many seditious Priests have met with Punishment or Discountenance from their Superiors; tho' we all know what Resentment they would have found, if any one had dared to have open'd his Mouth against the Power and Pride of his Order?

What Care has been taken in the licensing or approving of School-Masters, who are almost all Jacobites! What a bitter and disaffected Spirit is there in the Charity-Schools, and all Schools! Is there a Contest any where between two Candidates, but the most Disaffected has the Vote and Interest of the Country-Clergy? And is not the same Partiality practis'd in most of the Colleges of the Universities?

Reconcile, if you can, your wild Conduct to any Semblance of Religion, or of common Sense and common Honesty. If a Protestant Dissenter is to be let into a Place by the good Pleasure and Indulgence of the Law; what Books, Scolding, and Fury! But when the Pretender and Popery are to be let into England, to the utter Subversion of Religion and Property, and against Law and Oaths; what Resignation! what Silence! Tho' you are sworn to oppose them, strongly and solemnly sworn, and have no Provocation not to oppose them, but that the Happiness and Estates of the Laity, and the Tender-

derness shewn to Dissenters, by which our People and our Riches are increas'd, and our Christian Spirit is shewn, disturb the Pride of the narrow, persecuting Ecclesiasticks, always insatiable and discontented, and always plotting and railing, while the Wealth and Dominion of Mankind are not entirely theirs.

It would be endless to enter into all the late and publick Instances of your Perjury, your Disaffections, and furious Spirit. I shall mention but one, and one that is a Disgrace to our Nation; an Instance of a mean Priest, destitute of Name and Parts, try'd and condemn'd for Sedition, and yet almost deify'd for his Insolence and Crimes. Ignorant of the Laws, and despising his own Oaths, he publicly attack'd the Constitution, and libell'd it. He asserted the Irresistibleness of all Governments, good or bad, tho' our own was founded upon Resistance. For this daring Offence he was impeach'd and try'd; try'd by one Part of the Legislature before the other, and condemn'd by all three: So that the Business of the Nation, and of Europe, stood still for many Weeks, till this groveling Offender had a Hearing, and his Sentence; a Sentence, which would have come more properly for him from the Chairman of a Petty-Sessions, than from the Mouth of a Lord High Chancellor of England!

What Reverence might not have been expected to such a Tryal as this, and what Acquiescence as to the Issue of it, especially from those who contended, daily and vehemently contended, from the Pulpit and the Press,
for

if the Priesthood itself, nay, all Nature; was to have been overturn'd by the apprehended whipping of a profligate Priest.

A sufficient Lesson is this to all Governments, how this sort of Men are to be trusted with Power, who dare thus act in spite of all Power! and a strong Proof to all Men how little Regard is due to the Opinions and Doctrines of these Men, who do not regard their own Doctrines! who teach what no Man ought to practice, and themselves will not! who are perpetually contradicting themselves, and one another, and yet are never in the Wrong! and who would not suffer the meanest, or worst of their Order, to be subject to the united and original Power of one of the greatest States in the World!

Sure this cannot be forgot whilst there is a King, or Liberty, in Israel!

I am, &c.

GENTLEMEN,

YOU are abus'd: You are blindly govern'd by certain Chiefs, who can have no View but to dispose of you; to make Sale of you for their own proper Advantage. By prating Pedants, and disaffected Monks, and by Party-Cries, and Party-Revelling, and Hogsheds of October, you are brought to adore this Duke, that Lord, and rother Knight or Squire; and

and to think that the Publick is undone, unless it be under the sole Management of these your Idols, who would effectually undo it. They once had Places: Had you then more Money, more Trade, or more Land and Liberty, by any wise or virtuous Conduct of theirs, than you have now? And did they not take that Opportunity of your generous Confidence in them, to betray you basely to France and the Pretender? And have they not ever since been labouring, by Plots and Rebellion, to accomplish that, which from the Shortness of their Reign, and the sudden Change, they could not then accomplish by Power?

Power and Places are still their only Aim: And to come at them, you see they would make War upon Heaven and Earth, and involve you in Blood and Popery. But you cannot have Places, Gentlemen: Your only Ambition ought to be the Security of your Property, and to live like Freemen. And are you not free? Is not your Property secure? Or can these Men accomplish their Designs and Conspiracies, but at the Expence of your Estates and your Freedom? They seek their Grandeur, and all their Advantages, from your Ruin and Servitude. You must pay the whole and long Reckoning at last. You must fill the empty Coffers of new Shoals of Banditti, who must be rewarded out of your Pockets for their villanous Merit and pretended Sufferings. You will have a whole and black Flight of Harpies to glut, who with ravenous and unhallowed Claws will devour your Substance;

and your Children's Bread. All-foreign Debts, all the Demands of Spain and Rome, will be brought upon you for Payment ; and all you have will be too little to satiate needy Traytors, whom you madly want to save your All ; which is not touch'd, nor can be hurt, but by them, and but too little to defend you from them.

Think you to be without Armies ? No ; Instead of occasional Troops, which their wicked Plots and Devices, and your own Disaffection, have brought upon you, you will see your Country and your Houses fill'd with Popish Armies, perhaps foreign Popish Armies. You will be told, that Protestant and Englifo ones, which already betray'd the Father, will betray the Son, and cannot be trusted : That your frequent Rebellions render you unfit to be rely'd on ; and that if you turn'd out a Protestant Prince, whom you your selves call'd in, you will be apt, upon the least Disgust, or Caprice, to turn out your hereditary King as you did his Father.

Think you that your present Debts will be cancell'd, and your Taxes made easy ? No ; your Taxes and your Funds will be continued : But instead of being apply'd, as they are, to pay off lawful Debts contracted for your Security, they will be seiz'd by this new Government, and call'd lawful Prize. It will be said, that they were given to keep out your lawful King, and ought to be made use of. to keep him in : That if you were so prodigal of your Wealth for the Support of Rebellion and Faction, can you refuse these Revenues, which

which are now no longer your own, but in Possession of the Enemies of the Establishment, who chiefly gain'd them at first by Stock-jobbing and Extortion, and now keep them as the Prizes of Disloyalty and Treason: Can you refuse these Revenues (so ill got, and as ill applied) to secure your lineal Government founded upon a long Succession of your natural Princes? These Revenues therefore, which are now your Property, and the Property of your Neighbours and Relations, will then be united to the Crown, fix an absolute Power there, and entail lasting and irretrievable Slavery upon your selves and your Posterity, and destroy at one Blow the whole Property and Trade of three great Kingdoms. At present, if prudent Methods be taken, (which surely Necessity must at last make us take,) these great Debts may be paid honestly off, and we may again see our selves a happy and disengag'd People. But upon such a dreadful Turn as the Conspirators intended, they will be thrown into a free Gift, and your Taxes will be made perpetual, to perpetuate your Slavery.

Do you expect any Redress of any kind from such a Parliament as can then be chosen, if any is chosen? No; hope it not. All that would serve you faithfully in it, will be call'd Enemies and Traytors to the new, and Friends to the late Rebellious Establishment: Such therefore will not dare to offer themselves to your Choice; and, if they did, would be mobb'd, or imprison'd. You must choose only such as are recommended to you, the ragged and famish'd Tribe that are brought over, Men of desperate Fortunes, the beggarly Plotters against your present Happiness, fiery and implacable Bigots, half Papists, enrag'd Malecontents, or rapacious Vultures; all gaping for Prey, all determin'd to every Measure of Oppression, and to sacrifice you and your Country to their Ambition and Want. You will then find time for Repentance, when it is too late, when all the Grievances which you now so wantonly complain of will fall upon you in earnest, and an hundred Fold, without Hope of Remedy or End.

Nor can this blessed Condition be brought upon you, but after the horrid Prelude of a long and cruel Civil War. You will first see your Country in Blood, your Cities burnt, your Houses plunder'd, your Cattle taken from you, your Stocks consum'd by Dragoons, and your Sons, your Neighbours, and Relations, murder'd before your Faces. Flatter not your selves, that his Majesty will easily quit the many Thousands of his Subjects, who will certainly and resolutely stand by him; or that he will want the Assistance of all the foreign Powers who are interested in his Establishment, or even in making this great Kingdom wretched, impotent, and poor. No, Gentlemen, you will have Armies of Germans and of Dutch pour'd in upon you on one Side, Spaniards and Russes on the other, and perhaps French on both Sides. Irish Papists will come over in Shoals; Hosts of Highlanders will fall like Snow from the North; and all the Neccessitous, the Debauch'd, the Ambitious, the the Rapacious, the Extravagant, and the Revengeful amongst your selves, will think these your Calamities their Harvest: They will banquet in your Plunder; and for a Share of you, will greedily join to devour you. Is this a Condition like that which you now enjoy?

How would you like to see your Churches dress'd up like Toyshops, and Vermin of various Fashions, Shapes and Colours, crawling about in them, antickly dress'd up in an hundred fantastical Garments; and the same Vermin, at other times, filling and polluting your Streets, haunting your Houses, debauching and corrupting your Wives, perverting your Children, devouring your Substance, and lording it over you? You will hardly know, thus transmogrify'd, the old Faces you have been us'd to, the Faces of these impious Wretches, who would bring all these frightful Mischiefs upon you. That they are ready and prepar'd for this ungodly Change, is evident from their maintaining and asserting all the vilest and most formidable Tenets of Popery; and by their uniting in all the traiterous Intrigues, and in all the basest and bloodiest Counsels of Papists. But that the Papists would protect or prefer them afterwards, is more than doubtful: It is not likely that they will trust those whom by Experience they know no Trust can bind. They know that those who have betray'd you, and a King, who has protected and prefer'd them, will betray also even Papists. They know, that neither Religion, nor Conscience, nor Honesty, nor Hardship, has any Share in their present Disaffection, which has its whole Root in Pride and Avarice, and the Lust of Rapine and Power, and that they will in a Moment turn upon them as soon as the first Preferments go by them, or they cannot all catch the Preferments and Wealth which they so immoderately thirst after.

Your present Deceivers, therefore, will not then be trusted. All Ecclesiastical Prizes will be the Prizes of Foreign Ecclesiasticks, or of those who have been ever staunch Catholics at Home. The others will be left to certain Contempt, Beggary, and if possible to Shame. It will not be forgot what servile Adoration they paid, what hollow Complements they made, to the late King James; Adoration that bordered upon Blasphemy, and Complements that interfered with the incommunicable Attributes of God ! And how faithlessly, how readily afterwards they betray'd him, when all his Favours did not fall in their Lap; and as soon as they found that for them alone his Tyranny was not exerted. It will be remembered how chearfully, or rather how revengefully, they run into the Revolution; and when they could not engross the whole Advantages of it, and could not make King William their Instrument and Bully, how they were continually libelling King William and the Revolution, continually prating, preaching, and plotting against both, notwithstanding their constant Oaths, their constant Abjurations, and Imprecations.

For

For God's sake, Gentlemen, think what you are doing: Your Lives, your Estates, your Religion, your Conscience, your Trade; your Country, your Honour, are all at stake, and you are wantonly throwing them all away; you are pursuing a false and miserable Shadow; and it would be happy for you, were it only a Shadow: In reality, you are going to catch in your Embraces, Superstition, Beggary, and Servitude. I approve your Love and Pursuit of Liberty, which ever was, and ever will be, a grateful and charming Sound in my Ears; and I will be always ready to lead you, or to follow you in that virtuous and noble Pursuit. This is Wisdom! This is Honour! But Honour is to be acquired by honourable Means, and not by Rapine, Perjury, and Murder.

I thank God, we have yet the Means left within our Constitution to save our selves. We have, in spite of Malice and Contumelies, an excellent, meek, and benevolent Prince, who has in no one Instance of his Reign attempted to strain his Prerogative above the Laws; which we defy his bitterest Enemies to say of the best of their favourite Kings, his Predecessors. He has every Disposition to make a People great and happy, and will be always ready to gratify them in every Thing they can reasonably ask for their Security. But if we would make our selves secure, we must make him secure. It cannot be denied: but there have been some Excesses of Power, and that we have suffer'd under many publick Calamities: None of them are, however, imputable to him; but to the Corruption and Intrigues of those who betrayed him and us, and to the constant Conspiracies of Traytors, which deterred honest Men from a severe Animadversion upon their Crimes, when they saw them pursued by those who rejoiced in those Crimes, with no Design to rectify Abuses, but to inflame Discontents.

To whom, Gentlemen, do we owe all our present Debts and Misfortunes? Even to those who oppos'd all the Measures for raising effectual Supplies in the first War, and ended the second by a scandalous Peace, which left us in Insecurity and Danger, and made more Taxes and more Debts necessary to our Security. To whom, as I have observ'd in a former Paper, do we owe standing Armies, such frequent Suspensions of the Habeas Corpus Bill, and so many consuming Pensions? Even to those, who by their constant Plots, Conspiracies, and Rebellions, have given Occasions, or Pretences, for these great Evils and Excesses. And now that they have brought all these Mischiefs, and many more upon us, and forced the Government upon Measures which perhaps would not have been thought of, and certainly would not have been complied with, they would impudently throw upon his Majesty the Burdens and Imputations, which they alone ought to bear, and impiously dethrone him, and undo their Country, for their own Crimes.

You are born, Gentlemen, to Liberty; and from it you derive all the Blessings you possess. Pray what Affection have these your Leaders ever

ever shewn to the Cause of Liberty? It is plain they have never taken the sacred Sound into their Mouths, but to profane it; nor pretended to cherish it, but in order to destroy it, and make it an unnatural Ladder to Tyranny. As often as Dominion has been in their own Hands, Liberty became a Crime, and a Sign of Sedition; and as often as they wanted to destroy Power, that is, as often as they were out of it, they prostituted the Spirit of Liberty to the Service of Treason. Hence their late Cries for Liberty, to animate you against a Government that protected it, and under the Pretence of affecting Liberty, to introduce a Tyranny that would destroy Soul, Body, and Property. They could, however, have made no dangerous Progress in this Mischief and Hypocrisy, if those who have always profess'd, and whose Interest it would have been always to have supported and practis'd, free and beneficent Principles, had not deserted those Principles, and arm'd by that Desertion the Enemies to all that is good and virtuous, with an Opportunity of turning Liberty upon her self. Let the real Friends to the Government support the Maxims upon which it stands, and upon which only it can stand, and they have nothing to fear from the well or ill-grounded Popularity of its Enemies.

Such, Gentlemen, are your Leaders, and such are the Grievances which they cause and complain of; and to cure them, they would introduce the compleatest and most comprehensive of all, a total Overthrow of Church and State. They have reduced us to unhappy Circumstances ; but let us not make them infinitely worse, and destroy our selves for Relief ; let us not, like silly and peevish Children, throw away what we are in Possession of, to attain what is out of our Power, and which attain'd, would undo us : Let us put on Resolutions suitable to our present Condition. Let all honest Men join with the greatest Unanimity in all Measures to preserve his Majesty and our Establishment ; and then we may rest assur'd, that his Majesty will do every Thing to preserve us. We may then ask with Confidence, and he will give with Pleasure. When the Kingdom is in this desirable Calm and Security, we shall not need so many Troops, nor will his Majesty desire them. We may lessen the publick Expences, pay off gradually the publick Debts, encrease the Trade, Wealth, and Power of the Nation, and be again a rich, easy, and flourishing People.
and

I cannot help perswading my self, that the Gentlemen at present in the Administration, who have observ'd and condemn'd so justly, the fatal and unsuccessful Measures taken by some of their Predecessors, the terrible Consequences that have flow'd from them, and the dreadful Advantages they gave to the common Enemies of his Majesty, of themselves, and of us all, are already convinced, that there is no Possibility of preserving our happy Establishment long, but by gaining and caressing People, making them easy and happy, letting them find their Account in his Majesty's jefty's Reign, and giving no Handles for just Reproach, or Pretences for Contumely, to those who would make no other Use of them but to destroy us all.

I am, &c.

GENTLEMEN,

I HAVE already address'd two of these Letters to the disaffected Clergy, and will in this apply my self to the disaffected Laity, their Followers.

I cannot help saying, Gentlemen, that it argues your great Lowness of Sense, and Depravity of Manners, to be thus blindly inflam'd by such forsworn Apostates, such lying and disaffected Monks, Men of such vile Morals: You see their unruly Spirit, their unhallowed Conduct, their daring and impious Perjuries; and yet will you be led by them into Wickedness as great, if possible, as their own, the Wickedness of unprovok'd Rebellion; and of overthrowing a Government, which, in Spite of their Malice and Lies, does really protect you in your Religion and Property; and of sacrificing a Protestant Church, that you think your selves fond of, to a Popish Pretender, who is bound by his Religion to destroy it?

And what is all this Noise about? For whose Sakes, think you, Gentlemen, all this Combustion.

buſtion is made? Do you believe they are ſerving your Interests, or their own? Have they in any Instance, or any Age, shewn any Regard, any Concern for your Persons, your Religion, or your Interests? If they pretend to have done so, they speak as falsely as they swear. Remember all the Reigns since Queen Elizabeth's Time; those Reigns that oppressed you; and that Revolution that saved you. Did they not make it the whole Business of their Zeal, of their Addresses and their Preachments, to give up your Persons, your Consciences, and your Fortunes, to the Pleasure and Lust of the Prince, and damn'd you if you defended either? Did they not impiously make our Saviour the Author of their inhuman Nonsense, and Christianity a Warrant of Indemnity for oppressing, robbing, chaining, and killing you? And did they not fill the Kingdom with Atheistical Volumes of Sermons, Books, and Addresses, and with Compliments and Curses upon this vile Head? And have they ever since expressly and publicly renounc'd these destroying Principles? When their own Interest is concern'd, no Principles can bind them, as we all see and know; but as to the Power of Princes over Laymen, over you, Gentlemen, have they not always asserted it to be boundless and discretionary, and always left you at the meer Mercy of Royal Lust and Madness? 'Tis true, they will not now suffer you to bear a Prince whom Laws can bind; nor would they formerly suffer you to preserve your selves,

selves from Tyrants, which neither God, nor Man, nor the Good of Mankind, could bind.

As soon as the great Queen Elizabeth was dead, who was resolv'd to be truly what she was call'd, Head of the Church, and in order to be so, kept her Priests in a just and becoming Subordination, and would not suffer them to meddle with or prate about her Government, (for which to this Day you have never heard them spare to her Memory one good Word,) and a weak Prince succeeded her, many of the leading Clergy advanc'd all the vilest Tenets of Popery: They declar'd that the Church of Rome, contrary to the express Words of the Homilies, was a true Church, (which they might as justly have said of the Church of Hell,) at the same time that they denounc'd Damnation against foreign and domestick Protestants for being no Churches at all: So much did they prefer their own notional Power of Ordination before the Precepts of our Saviour, and the Essentials of Religion. They persuaded the King to appoint three Bishops to reordain the Scotch Presbyters, which put that Kingdom in a Flame, as being in effect told, that they were in a State of Damnation before; and that their Ministers had no lawful Call to serve God without Episcopal Dubbing. And so he had like to have lost one of his Kingdoms, to gratify the Pride of a few crack-brain'd Ecclesiasticks.

Then profess'd Papists and Popish Principles grew in Request: Liberty of Conscience was once given to them by Proclamation, and always conniv'd at and indulg'd, whilst Pro-

Protestant Dissenters, and the best Churchmen too, under the odious Name of Puritans; were every where revil'd and persecuted. Then your Parents first heard, in this Protestant Church, of the Power of the Keys, the Indelible Character, the Uninterrupted Succession, the Real Presence, the Giving the Holy Ghost, the Divine Right of Kings and Bishops; all tending to aggrandize the Clergy, and enslave the Laity: Then was invented that nonsensical Apothegm, No Bishop, no King; which his Majesty echoing several times upon Oath at the Conference at Hampton-Court, the Archbishop declar'd; That doubtless his Majesty was inspir'd, and spoke by the special Assistance of God's Spirit. Then the Bishops thought it was their Time, with the Archbishop at their Head, to present a Memorial to the King, demanding an Exemption of their Courts from the Civil Jurisdiction, and the Ecclesiastical Power was every Day swelling, and carried to such a Pitch in the High-Commission-Court, as to draw the Parliament upon them. And to induce his Majesty to support them in their Nonsense and Roguery, they made him a Present of all your Persons, Lands, and Liberties. It became current Doctrine amongst the Prerogative Clergy, and Books were publish'd by some of them, and approv'd and applauded by the rest, to maintain that the King was Solutus ex legibus; that he need not call Parliaments, but might make Laws without them; and that it was a Favour to admit the Consent of his People in giving Subsidies.

This

This weak Prince left one as weak behind him, who having, as is said, been once destin'd to the Priesthood, and being a Bigot by Nature as well as Education, the Ecclesiasticks found in his Reign a proper Season, and a proper Soil to sow their Tares in, with a fair Prospect of a plentiful Harvest. Popery came into the Kingdom like a Torrent, and arbitrary Power appear'd undisguis'd, and in the most glaring Colours: The King, by positive Order to the Chancellor, forbids the Laws against Papists to be put in Execution; and, notwithstanding the constant Protestations of Parliaments, protects Romish Priests against legal Prosecutions: Popish Books were licens'd by Laud; and Protestant ones, which defended the Articles and the Opinions of the establish'd Church, were forbidden, suppress'd, and punish'd in the Star-Chamber. Mountague, who was impeach'd by Parliament for his Attempts to introduce Popery, was not only protected, but made Bishop of Chichester. Laud issu'd Injunctions, by his own Authority, for reforming the Church, and bringing it nearer to Popery: He had the Sauciness to declare publicly, That he hop'd to see the Time when no Jack Gentleman should dare to keep on his Hat before the meanest Curate. The Bishops disclaim'd all Jurisdiction from the Crown in Bastwick's Tryal, and the Independance of the Church upon the State was openly asserted. Then came in the Altar, and the unbloody Sacrifice upon it, and the antick and popish Consecration of Churches and Church-Yards, with many other Monkish Fool-

Fooleries, to draw us to a nearer Conformity with Rome.

And as Priestcraft and Tyranny are ever inseparable, and go hand-in-hand, infinite other Oppressions were brought upon the poor People, and proved by the Priests to be Jure Divino, as, unlawful Imprisonments, various Monopolies, extorted Loans, numerous Taxes; all levied without Authority of Parliament. Sibthorp and Manwaring, two of Land's Creatures, were set on to preach, that the King was not bound by the Laws of the Land; and that the King's Royal Will, in imposing Loans and Taxes, did oblige the Subject's Conscience on Pain of Damnation: And his Majesty sent a special Mandate to Archbishop Abbot, to licence those Sermons; and he was suspended for not doing it. And then it seems it was lawful to suspend the greatest Clergyman, and first Subject of England, for doing his Duty and preserving the Laws; and now it is a sacrilegious Usurpation of the Divine Rights of the Clergy, to deprive a Bishop for the most traiterous Conspiracy against his King, his Country, and the Religion he himself professes. To make good all these Invasions upon publick Liberty, a German Army was contracted for; and some Time after, an Irish and Papish one was actually rais'd by Strafford in Ireland.

During these Reigns, all the High Clergy were the profess'd Trumpets, the Setting-Dogs, and spiritual Janizaries of Governments, which us'd you like Cattle, and starved you, or slew you for Profit and Sport. They made made you conspire against your selves, by alarming your Consciences, and filling them with blind and unnatural Resignation to all the Excesses of Cruelty, Plunder, Oppression, Killing, Servitude, and every Species of inhuman Barbarity; but now that you are protected and secure in standing Laws, which the Administration has never pretended to dispense with; when you have the full Enjoyment of your Consciences, which the Government in no Instance restrains; when you are secure in your Estates and Property, which the Government does not touch, nor pretends any Right to touch; when you have as much Liberty as Mankind can under any Government possess, a Liberty which goes to the very Borders of Licentiousness: I say, under all these Blessings, Blessings unknown almost to all Men, but English Men; will these implacable and steady Impositors let you alone? Are not their spiritual Goads continually in your Sides, stimulating you to renounce your Understanding, your Freedom, your Safety, your Religion, your Honesty, your Conscience; and to destroy the Source of all your Happiness and Enjoyments, religious and secular; and to exchange a free Government, and every Thing that is valuable upon Earth, for the Cruelty, Madness, Chains, Misery, and Deformity of Popery, and of Popish Tyranny?

Look back, Gentlemen, once more, to later Reigns: What Testimony did they bear against the bare-faced Encouragement of Popery, and the Persecution of Protestants in

Charles

Charles II's Reign; against his fatal Treaties and Leagues with France; his unjust Wars with the United Provinces, and his treacherous Seizure of their Smyrna Fleet, to destroy the only State in the World that could be then call'd the Bullwark of Liberty and the Protestant Religion? What did they say against the terrible Excesses, the arbitrary Imprisonments, the legal Murders, and Violation of Property, during his Reign? Did they not encourage and sanctify all the Invasions and Encroachments of the Court, and cursed all who oppos'd them, or complained of them? Can they have the Forehead to complain of Armies, of Taxes, or any sort of Oppression, (however just such Complaints may be in others,) they who have never shewn themselves for any Government, but what subsisted by Armies and Oppression? They have been always mortal Foes to popular Liberty, which thwarts and frustrates all their aspiring insatiable Views; and in every favourite Reign preach'd it as impiously down, as they preach'd up every growing and heavy Oppression.

Nor did they ever quarrel with King James, but consecrate all his Usurpations, his Armies, and dispensing Power, till he gave Liberty of Conscience to Dissenters, and till some of their own ill-contriv'd Oppressions were brought Home to their own Doors; and then they cursed their King, and help'd to send him a begging. They resisted him, and upon their Principles were Rebels to him, and animated others to be so, and have been damning you and the Nation for that Resistance ever since? Which is a full Confession, That when a Popish Tyrant plunders and oppresses you, you neither can or ought to have any Remedy; but if he touches but a Tythe-Pig or Surplice of theirs, their Heel is ready to be lifted up against him, and their Hands to throw the Crown from his Head, and to put it upon another, with fresh Oaths of Allegiance and Obedience; and to pull it off again in spite of those Oaths, or without any Forfeiture, or any just Provocation. Is not this infamous Conduct of theirs manifest to Sight? Does it not stare you and every Briton in the Face? And yet will you be implicitly led by such Traytors to God, to Truth, and to you?

How did they behave towards King William, whom they themselves invited over? As soon as he gave Liberty of Conscience to Protestant Dissenters, and he let them see that he would not be a blind Tool to a priestly Faction, but would equally protect all his Subjects who were faithful to him, and had set himself at the Head of the Protestant Interest, and every Year hazarded his Person in dangerous Battles and Sieges for the Liberty of England and of Europe, against the most dreadful Scourge and Oppressor of Mankind that ever plagued the Earth; they were perpetually preaching and haranging, always calumniating, reviling, distressing, and plotting against him, and endeavouring to render all his Measures, all his generous Attempts for their own Security, abortive and ineffectual.

tual. Nor did they use the late Queen, their own favourite Queen, or even those of their own Party, who served her faithfully, one jot better, till she fell into the Hands of a few desperate Traytors to herself and them? who gave away all the Advantages of a long, expensive, and successful War; put France into a Condition to again enslave Europe, and to place a Popish Traytor, and an attainted Fugitive upon the Throne of these Kingdoms, (which he had undoubtedly done, if unforeseen Accidents had not prevented it). And then what Encomiums, what Panegyricks, what fulsome and blasphemous Flattery, did they bestow upon her Person and Actions, and have done so ever since?

Is not this, Gentlemen, using you like Slaves, and worse than Spaniels, making you the tame Vassals of Tyrants, and restless Rebels to lawful Governors? Is not this using you like insensible Instruments, void of Reason, and of Conscience, of Prudence, and of Property? Is this Teaching! this the Price of their Revenues and Ease! this the Function of Ministers! or can human Invention, animated and aided by human Malice, draw the Character of more unlimited, merciless, and ontrageous Enemies?

I am, &c.

GENTLEMEN,

AS I have in my last and former Papers given you some faint Images of the Hypocrisy, Pride, Tyranny, Perjury, Atheism, and restless Ambition of the Jacobite and Disaffected Clergy, who constantly mislead you, and constantly abuse you; so I shall in this inform you what are their Views, what is the Butt and Mark, to which they direct all their Actions; what the Idol to which they sacrifice their Honour, their Conscience, their Religion, and their God. It is, Gentlemen, to their Ambition and Pride: It is to get you into their Power; to have the Disposal of your Persons, your Opinions, and your Estates; and to make you ignorant, poor, miserable and slavish, whilst they riot upon your Fortunes, and prey upon your Industry. They look abroad with envious and wishing Eyes at the Revenues, Grandeur, and Power of the Romish Clergy; and remember with Regret, how they lost all those fine Things at the Reformation; and they have never lost Sight of them since, but have been constantly involving you in Factions, in Misery, and often in Blood, to recover them again.

Popery is the most dreadful Machine, the utmost Stretch of human Politicks, that ever was invented amongst Men to aggrandize and and enrich the Clergy, and to oppress and enslave the Laity. All its Doctrines, all its Views, all its Artifices, are calculated for the sole Advantage of the Priests, and the Destruction of the People, at the Expence of Virtue, good Government, common Sense, and the Gospel. It is an open Conspiracy of the Ecclesiasticks, against all the rest of Mankind, to rob them of their Estates, of their Consciences, and their Senses; and to make them the Dupes and tame Vassals of swacy and ambitious Pedants. Look, Gentlemen, into their Doctrines and their Practices, and see whether you can find the least Appearance of Honour, Morality, common Honesty, or Religion in them, or any thing but Pride, Hypocrisy, Fraud, Tyranny, and Domination. What do they mean by the Power of the Keys, of Binding and Loosing, of Excommunication, of their being Mediators and Intercessors between God and you, by their pardoning Sins, and their having the sole Power of giving the Sacraments, which they tell you are necessary to Salvation, and their Doctrines about Purgatory, but to persuade you, if you are foolish enough to believe them, that your future Happiness and Misery depend upon them? And then they well know that you will give the most you have in this World, to be secure in the next.

What do they intend by telling you that Bishops are Jure Divino, by the Power of Ordination; and that they can alone make one another; the indelible Character; their uninterrupted Succession from the Apostles; by their

their being able to give the Holy Ghost, and having it themselves; but to create Reverence to their Persons, Submission to their Authority, and to render themselves independent on the Civil Government? And then they know the Civil Government will be dependent on them. What Purposes does it serve, to make you believe that Tythes (which they hold by Laws of your making) are Jure Divino; that it is Sacrilege to resume Lands or Donations, once given to the Clergy; and that they can never afterwards be alienated; but constantly to encrease their Riches, and consequently their Power, and Dependance, till by the natural Course of Things they come to be possess'd of all? What do they mean by their Holy Water, their Extreme Unction, their Exorcisms, their Consecration of Churches and Church-Yards, and their absurd Notion of Transubstantiation, but to gain Adoration to the priestly Character, as if he was able by a few canting Words to change the Nature of Things, bless dead Earth and Walls, and make a God out of Meal? Why so many Monasteries and Nunneries, so many religious Orders of Men and Women, so many Fraternities, Colleges, and Societies of different Kinds, but to engage great Numbers of young People and potent Families in their Interest? Why so many antick Garbs, so many rich Vestments, so many gaudy Shrines, so many deck'd Images used in their Worship, and so much pompous Devotion? Why Organs and so much Musick, so many Singing-Men and Singing-Boys, but to attract the Eyes and

VOL. IV. F Ears,

Ears, and to amuse the Understandings of the gaping Herd, and to make them forget their Senses, and the plain natural Religion of the Gospel; and to engage Men and Ladies of Pleasure in the Interests of so agreeable a Devotion?

How comes it to be a Part of Religion, not to confess our Sins to God, but to the Priest? It lets him into all the Secrets of Families, the Power of imposing what severe Penances he pleases upon superstitious Penitents, and of commuting for those Penances; acquaints him with all Designs to the Disadvantage of his Order; gives him Opportunities of debauching Women himself, and procuring them for others; and holds them devoted to his Will, by the Knowledge of their most important Concerns. And lastly, what do they mean by the terrible Engine of the Inquisition, and by their hellish Doctrine of Persecution for Opinions; but to keep all Men in Awe of them, and to terrify those whom they cannot deceive? These are the favourite Doctrines of Popery! These the Doctrines they are concerned for! If you are rich, or powerful, you may be as wicked as you please, and no Body shall molest you; nay, the Priests shall be ready to assist you, to pimp for you, and to pardon you. The same is true of the speculative Opinions held by that Church, that do not affect their Power and Pride: They suffer their Orders to differ about them; and do not trouble themselves what the People believe concerning them; nor are any of the People at all concerned in them. The absurd Notions and ridiculous Worship of the Papists are only foolish Things; but the Power of Popery is a terrible Thing. If a Man adores rotten Bones, and uses antick Gestures towards them, he makes a Fool of himself, but hurts not me; but if he would rob me, torture me, or burn me, for not playing the Fool too, it is Time to keep him at a Distance, or to hold his Hands. It is the Power of Popery, the cruel, the insatiable, the killing Spirit of Popery, that is to be dreaded. This, Gentlemen, is the Power, this the terrible Condition that many of your Protestant Instructors would bring you under, and which you are to guard against.

These wicked Doctrines, these absurd Opinions, were all abolish'd, all renounc'd by the first Reformers, but were kept alive by the corrupt Part of the Clergy, and have been growing upon you ever since: They have been conniv'd at by some, openly asserted by others, and, I wish I could say, as openly discountenanc'd by the rest. It would fill a Volume, instead of a Paper, to enumerate all the Clergymen, in the highest Repute amongst their own Order, who have abetted most, if not all of these monstrous Opinions; and I have heard as yet of none of them who have been censur'd by any publick Act of their Body. I do confess, many of the Corrupt amongst them have renounc'd the Pope's Authority, as believing they might find fairer Quarter from a King they educated, and hop'd to govern, than from a foreign Prelate, and his needy Priests, who would plunder them, them, oppress them, and give away their Revenues to his Creatures, and to lazy Monks and Fryars; and they hoped too, some favourable Opportunities might happen to get away the Regale from the Crown; and we never had a Prince whom they could intirely govern, or who would not be govern'd at all by them, but they have laid Claim to it, and attempted it. But what stood always in their Way, and made all these Designs impracticable, was the Power of Parliament, and the Liberties of the People, who preserv'd the Prerogative of the Crown to preserve themselves; and therefore they levell'd all their Batteries against publick Liberty, and to make the Prince absolute, as finding it much easier to flatter, mislead, or bargain with one Man, (and often a weak one,) than to deceive a whole People, and make them conspire against themselves; and if Persuasion, Bigottry, and Fear, would not make him practicable to their Designs, they knew that Poison and the Dagger were at Hand.

But now two hundred Years Experience has convinc'd them, that the People will not suffer the Crown to part with the Regale; nor would they themselves part with their Liberty; and till they do so, there is no Possibility of settling a pompous Hierachy, and gaining the Domination they aspire to; and therefore they are reduc'd to accept barefac'd Popery, and throw themselves under the Protection of the Holy Father: And that is the Game they are now playing. What else, Gentlemen, can they propose by a Popish lish Revolution, but to share in the Power and Tyranny that attends it? They have not sufficient Stipends for the daily Mischiefs they do: They want greater Revenues, and an Ecclesiastical Inquisition. Now, at whose Expence think you must this Accumulation of Wealth which they thirst for be acquir'd? How must this Babel of Authority which they pant after be rais'd? Not at the Expence of the Pretender, by whose Assistance they must gain them: No, Gentlemen, from your Coffers these Riches must be drain'd: Over you this Tyranny must be exercis'd: The utter Extinction of your Liberties must constitute their Grandeur: The final Seizure of your Lands and Properties must support their Domination: You must be the poor harass'd Slaves of a monstrous two-headed Tyranny, and be constantly and inhumanly crush'd between the upper and the nether Millstone of the Regale and Pontificate, and, in any Dispute betwixt them, be given to Satan on one Side, and to the Executioner on both.

Many of you are in Possession of Improvements, and of Abbey-Lands, and are protected by the Constitution in those Possessions, which these reverend Cheats would rob you of; and only want an arbitrary and a Popish Government to enable them to commit that Robbery, to strip you to the Skin, and to reduce the English Laity to be once more humble Cottagers and Vassals to the Monks, Fryars, and other Ecclesiastical Gluttons, to whom the whole Riches of a great Nation will be no more than sufficient Wages for cheating and oppressing it. I bring you, Gentlemen, no false Charge against the Jacobite Clergy: Do they not claim your Estates publickly from the Prefs and the Pulpit; and from the Pulpit and the Prefs charge you with Sacrilege, and damn you for keeping them? Yes, Gentlemen, these reverend and self-denying Teachers damn you for keeping your own legal Possessions, and for eating your own Bread. Now I would leave you to reason upon this Conduct of theirs, to consider how nearly it affects you, and whether it tends, and what Sort of Protestants these Doctors are. If the Publick takes nothing from them which they occupied since the Reformation, why should they destroy the Government, but in hopes of destroying the Reformation, to get Possession of Popish Lands, and Popish Power; which, while the Reformation and the Government subsist, they can never possess.

That this, Gentlemen, is what they aim at, 'tis impossible to doubt. Lesley, long their Favourite and Director, who knew their Inclinations, knew their Views, and the best Way to apply to them, and to gain them, in his Letter to the Clergy, (as I think it was,) which was to usher in the Rebellion at the Beginning of his Majesty's Reign, promises them an Independance upon the Crown, and that they should chuse their own Bishops. It is Dominion, it is Power, they court; it is themselves they adore: When have they consider'd you, or your Interests, when they thought they could make a Bargain for themselves? When King James apply'd to the Bishops upon

upon his Fears of an Invasion from your great Deliverer, and desired them to propose the Nation's Grievances, what Grievances did they represent but their own trifling Complaints? They said nothing of Standing-Armies, how much soever they complain of them now. Who are their Favourites? Even Papists and Nonjurors, known Rebels, or Men of rebellious Principles, the most ambitious and wicked amongst the Clergy, and the most debauch'd and stupid amongst the Laity. What Sermons have they preach'd, what Books have they wrote, against Popery, though their Flocks are every Day decreasing? What Exhortations against Popish Principles, which are constantly growing upon us? Whom do they treat as their avow'd Enemies, but the Friends to the Revolution, the most steady Friends to the Establishment they have sworn to, the Protestant Dissenters, and such of their own Body as regard their Oaths, and the Principles of the Reformation? What have you gained by all the Favours lately shewn to them? Which of them have been oblig'd by these Concessions? You have given them the First Fruits: You have in effect repeal'd the Statute of Mortmain: You have given them a shorter Method to recover their Tithes: You have encreas'd their Number and Riches by building more Churches: You have save still, whilst they have been destroying. the Modus's through England, buying up your Advowsons, and extorting upon their Tenants, and making those Estates more precarious, which were always before esteem'd as certain Interests as any in Great Britain: Has all this oblig'd them? Has it taught them Moderation? On the contrary, it encreases their Demands upon you. Be assur'd, they will never be satisfy'd, never think they have enough whilst you have a Penny left; and when they have got all your Lands, they must ride and enslave your Persons.

Will you bear, Gentlemen, such constant and impudent Insults? Will you still be govern'd by such abandon'd Deceivers? Are you Men, free Men, rational Men, and will you bear this wild and priestly War against human Nature, against Freedom, and against Reason? Will you indeed believe them, when they pretend any Regard to you and your Interest? And is it upon your Score that they practice Perjury and Rebellion themselves, and promote it in others?

I am, &c.

S I R,

WHEN, in King William's Reign, the Question was in Debate, Whether England should be rul'd by Standing Armies? the Argument commonly us'd by some who had the Presumption to call themselves Whigs, and own'd in the Ballancing Letter, (suppos'd to be written by one who gave the World to all the rest) was, That all Governments must must have their Periods one Time or other, and when that Time came, all Endeavours so preserve Liberty were fruitless; and shrewd Hints were given in that Letter, that England was reduced to such a Condition; that our Corruptions were so great, and the Dissatisfaction of the People was so general, that the publick Safety could not be preserved, but by encreasing the Power of the Crown: And this Argument was us'd by those shameless Men, who had caus'd all that Corruption, and all that Dissatisfaction.

But that Gentleman and his Followers were soon taught to speak other Language: They were remov'd from the Capacity of perplexing publick Affairs any more: The Nation shew'd a Spirit that would not submit to Slavery; and their unhappy and betray'd Master, from being the most popular Prince who ever sat upon the English Throne, became, through the Treachery of his Servants, suspected by many of his best Subjects, and was render'd unable, by their Jealousies, to defend himself and them; and so considerable a Faction was form'd against his Administration, that no good Man can reflect without Concern and Horror, on the Difficulties which that Great and Good King was reduced to grapple with, during the Remainder of his troublesome Reign.

I have lately met with some Creatures and Tools of Power, who speak the same Language now: They tell us, that Matters are come to that Pass, that we must either receive the Pretender, or keep him out with Bribes and Standing Armies: That the Nation is corrupt; that there is no governing it by any other Means: And, in short, that we must submit to this great Evil, to prevent a greater; as if any Mischief could be more terrible than the highest and most terrible of all Mischiefs, universal Corruption, and a military Government. It is indeed impossible for the Subtlety of Traitors, the Malice of Devils, or for the Cunning and Cruelty of our most implacable Enemies, to suggest stronger Motives for the undermining and Overthrow of our excellent Establishment, which is built upon the Destruction of Tyranny, and can stand upon no other Bottom. It is Madness in Extremity, to hope that a Government founded upon Liberty, and the free Choice of the Affertors of it, can be supported by other Principles; and whoever would maintain it by contrary ones, intends to blow it up, let him alledge what he will. This gives me every Day new Reasons to believe what I have long suspected; for if ever a Question should arise, Whether a Nation shall submit to certain Ruin, or struggle for a Remedy? these Gentlemen well know which Side they will chuse, and certainly intend that which they must chuse.
F 7 and

I am willing to think, that these impotent Babblers speak not the Sense of their Superiors, but would make servile Court to them from Topicks which they abhor. Their Superiors must know, that it is Raving and Phrenzy to affirm, that a free People can be long govern'd by impotent Terrors; that Millions: will consent to be ruin'd by the Corruptions of a few; or that those few will join in their Ruin any longer than the Corruption lasts: That every Day new and greater Demands will rise upon the Corruptors; that no Revenue, how great soever, will feed the Voraciousness of the Corrupted; and that every Disappointment will make them turn upon the Oppressors of their Country, and fall into its true Interest, and their own: That there is no Way in Nature to preserve a Revolution in Government, but by making the People easy under it, and shewing them their Interest in it; and that Corruption, Bribery, and Terrors, will make no lasting Friends, but infinite and implacable Enemies; and that the best Security of a Prince amongst a free People, is the Affections of his People, which he can always gain by making their Interest his own, and by shewing that all his Views tend to their Good. They will, then, as they love themselves, love him, and defend him who defends them. Upon this faithful Basis, his Safety will be better establish'd, than upon the ambitious and variable Leaders of a few Legions, who may be corrupted, disoblig'd, or surpriz'd, and often have been so; and hence great Revolutions have been brought about, and great Nations undone, only by the Revolt of single Regiments.

Shew a Nation their Interest, and they will certainly fall into it: A whole People can have no Ambition but to be govern'd justly; and when they are so, the Intrigues, and

D.H.

Disatisfactions of Particulars will fall upon their own Heads. What has any of our former Courts ever got by Corruption, but to disaffect the People, and weaken themselves? Let us now think of other Methods, if it is only for the Sake of the Experiment. The Ways of Corruption have been tried long enough in past Administrations: Let us try in this what publick Honesty will do; and not condemn it, before we have fully prov'd it, and found it ineffectual; and it will be Time enough to try other Methods, when this fails.

That we must either receive the Pretender, or keep up great Armies to keep him out, is frightful and unnatural Language to English Ears: It is an odd Way of dealing with us, that of offering us, or forcing upon us, an Alternative, where the Side which they would recommend, is full as formidable as the Side from which they would terrify us. If we are to be govern'd by Armies, it is all one to us, whether they be Protestant or Popish Armies; the Distinction is ridiculous, like that between a good and a bad Tyranny: We see, in Effect, that it is the Power and Arms of a Country, that forms and directs the Religion of a Country; and I have before shewn, that true Religion cannot subsist, where true Liberty does not. It was chiefly, if not wholly King James's usurp'd Power, and his many Forces, and not his being a Papist, that render'd him dreadful to his People. Military Governments are all alike; nor does the Liberty and Property of the Subject fare a bit the better or the worse, for the Faith and Opinion of the Soldiery. Nor does an Arbitrary Protestant Prince use his People better than an Arbitrary Popish Prince; and we have seen both Sorts of them changing the Religion of their Country, according to their Lust.

They are therefore stupid Politicians, who would derive Advantages from a Distinction which is manifestly without a Difference: It is like, however, that they may improve in their Subtilties, and come, in time, to distinguish between corrupt Corruption, and uncorrupt Corruption, between a good ill Administration, and an ill good Administration, between oppressive Oppression, and unoppressive Oppression, and between French Dragooning and English Dragooning; for there is scarce any other new Pitch of Nonsense and Contradiction left to such Men in their Reasonings upon Publick Affairs, and in the Part they act in them.

Of a Piece with the rest, is the stupid Cunning of some Sort of Statesmen, and practis'd by most Foreign Courts, to blame the poor People for the Misery they bring upon them. They say they are extremely corrupt, and so keep them starving and enslav'd by Way of Protection. They corrupt them by all manner of Ways and Inventions, and then reproach them for being corrupt. A whole Nation cannot be bribed, and if its Representatives are, it is not the Fault, but the Misfortune, of the Nation: And if the Corrupt save themselves by corrupting others,

the People who suffer by the Corruptions of both, are to be pitied, and not abus'd. Nothing can be more shameless and provoking, than to bring a Nation by execrable Frauds and Extortions, against its daily Protestations and Remonstrances, into a miserable pass, and then father all those Villanies upon the People who would have gladly hang'd the Authors of them. At Rome, the whole People could be entertain'd, feasted, and bribed; but it is not so elsewhere, where the People are too numerous, and too far spread, to be debauch'd, cajol'd, and purchas'd; and if any of their Leaders are, it is without the People's Consent.

There is scarce such a Thing under the Sun as a corrupt People, where the Government is uncorrupt: It is that, and that alone, which makes them so; and to calumniate them for what they do not seek, but suffer by, is as great Impudence as it would be, to knock a Man down, and then rail at him for hurting himself. In what Instances do the People of any Country in the World throw away their Money by Millions, unless by trusting it to those who do so? Where do the People send great Fleets, at a great Charge, to be frozen up in one Climate, or to be eaten out by Worms in another, unless for their Trade and Advantage? Where do the People enter into mad Wars against their Interest, or, after victorious ones, make Peace, without stipulating for one new Advantage for themselves; but, on the contrary, pay the Enemy for having beaten them? Where do.

do the People plant Colonies or purchase Provinces, at a vast Expence, without reaping, or expecting to reap, one Farthing from them, and yet still defend them at a further Expence? Where do the People make distracted Bargains, to get imaginary Millions, and after having lost by such Bargains almost all the real Millions they had, yet give more Millions to get rid of them? What wise or dutiful People consents to be without the Influence of the Presence of their Prince, and of his Vertues, or of those of his Family, who are to come after him? No, — these Things are never done by any People; but wherever they are done, they are done without their Consent; and yet all these Things have been done in former Ages, and in neighbouring Kingdoms.

For such guilty and corrupt Men, therefore, to charge the People with Corruption, whom either they have corrupted, or cannot corrupt, and, having brought great Misery upon them, to threaten them with more; is, in effect, to tell them plainly, “Gentlemen, we have us’d you very ill, for which you who are innocent of it, are to blame; we therefore find it necessary, for your Good, to use you no better, or rather worse: And if you will not accept of this our Kindness, which, however, we will force upon you, if we can, we will give you up into the terrible Hands of raw Heads and bloody Bones; who, being your Enemy, may do you as much Mischief as we, who are your Friends, have done you.”

I appeal to common Sense, Whether this be not the Sum of such Threats and Reasonings in their native Colours.

The Partizans of Oliver Cromwell, when he was meditating Tyranny over the Three Nations, gave out, that it was the only Expedient to ballance Factions, and to keep out Charles Stuart; and so they did worse Things to keep him out, than he could have done if they had let him in. And, after that King's Restoration, when there was an Attempt made to make him absolute, by enabling him to raise Money without Parliament, (an Attempt which every Courtier, except Lord Clarendon, came into) it was alledg'd to be the only Expedient to keep the Nation from falling back into a Commonwealth; as if any Commonwealth upon Earth was not better than any Absolute Monarchy. His Courtiers foresaw, that by their mad and extravagant Measures, they should make the Nation mad, and were willing to save themselves by the final Destruction of the Nation; they therefore employ'd their Creatures to whisper abroad stupid and villanous Reasons, why People should be content to be finally undone, lest something not near so bad, should befall them.

Those who have, by abusing a Nation, forfeited its Affections, will never be for trusting a People, who, they know, do justly detest them; but having procur'd their Aversion and Enmity, will be for fortifying themselves against it by all proper Ways; and the Ways of Corruption, Depredation and Force, being being the only proper ones, they will not fail to be practis'd; and those who practice them, when they can no longer deny them, will be finding Reasons to justify them; and, because they dare not avow the true Reasons, they must find such false ones as are most likely to amuse and terrify: And hence so much Nonsense and Improbability utter'd in that Reign, and sometimes since, to vindicate guilty Men, and vilify an innocent People, who were so extravagantly fond of that Prince, that their Liberties were almost gone, before they would believe them in Danger.

It is as certain, that King James II. wanted no Army to help him to preserve the Constitution, nor to reconcile the People to their own Interest: But, as he intended to invade and destroy both, nothing but Corruption and a Standing Army could enable him to do it; and (thank God) even his Army fail'd him, when he brought in Irish Troops to help them. This therefore was his true Design; but his Pretences were very different. He Pleaded the Necessity of his Affairs, nay, of Publick Affairs, and of keeping up a good Standing Force to Preserve his Kingdoms, forsooth, from Insults at home and from abroad. This was the Bait; but his People, who had no longer any Faith in him, and to whom the Hook appear'd threatening and bare, would not believe him, nor swallow it; and if they were jealous of him, restless under him, and ready to rise against him, he gave them sufficient Cause. He was under no Hardship nor

Neces-

Necessity but what he created to himself, nor did his People withdraw their Affections from him, till he had withdrawn his Right to those Affections. Those who have us'd you ill, will never forgive you; and it is no new Thing wantonly to make an Enemy, and then to calumniate and destroy him for being so.

When People, through continual ill Usage, grow weary of their present ill Condition, they will be so far from being frighten'd with a Change, that they will wish for one; and instead of terrifying them, by threatening them with one, you do but please them, even in Instances where they have no Reason to be pleas'd. Make them happy, and they will dread any Change; but while they are ill us'd, they will not fear the worst. The Authors of publick Misery and Plunder, may seek their only Safety in general Desolation; but, to the People, nothing can be worse than Ruin, from what Hand soever it comes: A Protestant Musket kills as sure as a Popish one; and an Oppressor is an Oppressor, to whatever Church he belongs: The Sword and the Gun are of every Church, and so are the Instruments of Oppression. The late Directors were all stanch Protestants; and Cromwell had a violent Aversion to Popery.

We are, doubtless, under great Necessities in our present Circumstances; but to increase them, in order to cure them, would be a preposterous Remedy, worthy only of them who brought them upon us; and who, if they had common Shame in them, would conceal, as far as they could, under Silence, the heavy Evils, which, tho' they lie upon every Man's Shoulders, yet lie only at the Doors of a few. The Plea of Necessity, if it can be taken, will justify any Mischief, and the worst Mischiefs. Private Necessity makes Men Thieves and Robbers; but publick Necessity requires that Robbers of all Sizes should be hang'd: Publick Necessity therefore, and the Necessity of such pedant Politicians, are different and opposite Things. There is no Doubt, but Men guilty of great Crimes, would be glad of an enormous Power to protect them in the greatest; and then tell us there is a Necessity for it. Those against whom Justice is arm'd, will ever talk thus, and ever think it necessary to disarm her. But whatever sincere Services they may mean to themselves by it, they can mean none to his Majesty; who would be undone with his Subjects, by such treacherous and ruinous Services: And therefore it is fit that Mankind should know, and they themselves should know, that his Majesty can and will be defended against them and their Pretender, without Standing Armies, which would make him formidable only to his People, and contemptible to his Foes; who take justly the Measure of his Power from his Credit with his Subjects.

But I shall consider what present Occasion there is of keeping up more Troops than the usual Guards and Garrisons, and shall a little further animadvert upon the Arts and frivolous Pretences made Use of, in former Reigns, to reduce this Government to the Condition and Model of the pretended Jure-Divino-Monarchies, where Millions must be miserable and undone, to make one and a few of his Creatures lawless, rampant, and unsafe.

I am, &c.

S I R,

IT is certain, that Liberty is never so much in danger, as upon a Deliverance from Slavery. The remaining Dread of the Mischiefs escaped, generally drives or decoys Men into the same or greater; for then the Passions and Expectations of some run high, and the Fears of others make them submit to any Misfortunes, to avoid an Evil that is over; and both Sorts concur in giving to a Deliverer, all that they are delivered from: In the Transports of a Restoration, or Victory, or upon a Plot discover'd, or a Rebellion quell'd, nothing is thought too much for the Benefactor, nor any Power too great to be left to his Discretion, tho' there can never be less Reason for giving it to him than at those Times; because, for the most part, the Danger is past, his Enemies are defeated and intimidated, and consequently that is a proper Juncture for the People to settle themselves, and secure their Liberties, since no one is likely to disturb them in doing so.

However,

However, I confess, that Custom, from Time immemorial, is against me, and the same Custom has made most of Mankind Slaves: Agathocles saved the Syracusians, and afterwards destroyed them. Pisistratus pretending to be wounded for protecting the People, prevail'd with them to allow him a Guard for the Defence of his Person, and by the Help of that Guard usurp'd the Sovereignty: Cæsar and Marius deliver'd the Commons of Rome, from the Tyranny of the Nobles, and made themselves Masters of both Commons and Nobles: Sylla deliver'd the Senate from the Insolence of the People, and did them more Mischief than the Rabble could have done in a Thousand Years: Gustavus Ericson delivered the Swedes from the Oppression of the Danes, and made large Steps towards enslaving them himself: The Antwerpians call'd in the Duke of Allencon, to defend them against the Spaniards; but he was no sooner got, as he thought, in full Possession of their Town, but he fell upon them himself with the Forces which he brought for their Defence. But the Townsmen happen'd to be too many for him, and drove these their new Protectors home again: Which Disappointment, and just Disgrace, broke that good Duke's Heart. Oliver Cromwell headed an Army which pretended to fight for Liberty, and by that Army became a bloody Tyrant; as I once saw a Hawk very generously rescue a Turtle Dove from the Persecution of two Crows, and then eat him up himself.

Almost

Almost all Men desire Power; and few let any Opportunity to get it, and all who are like to suffer under it, ought to be strictly upon their Guard in such Conjunctions as are most likely to encrease, and make it uncontrollable. There are but two Ways in Nature to enslave a People, and continue that Slavery over them; the first is Superstition, and the last is Force; By the one, we are perswaded that it is our Duty to be undone; and the other undoes us whether we will or no. I take it, that we are pretty much out of Danger of the first, at present; and, I think, we cannot be too much upon our guard against the other; for, though we have nothing to fear from the best Prince in the World, yet we have every thing to fear from those who would give him a Power inconsistent with Liberty, and with a Constitution which has lasted almost a Thousand Years without such a Power, which will never be ask'd with an Intention to make no Use of it.

The Nation was formed, upon the Restoration of King Charles II. that they gave to him all that he ask'd, and more than he ask'd. They complemented him with a vast Revenue for Life, and almost with our Liberties and Religion too; and if unforeseen Accidents had not happen'd to prevent it, without doubt we had lost both; and if his Successor could have had a little Patience, and had used no Rogues but his old Rogues, he might have accomplished the Business, and Popery and Arbitrary Power had been ~~been~~ fore Divine at this Day; but he made too much haste to be at the End of his Journey; and his Priests were in too much haste to be on Horseback too, and so the Beast grew skittish, and overthrew them both.

Then a new Set of Deliverers arose, who had saved us from King James's Army, and would have given us a bigger in the Room of it, and some of them Foreigners; and told us that the King longed for them, and it was a Pity that so good a Prince should lose his Longing, and miscarry; but he did lose it, and miscarried no otherwise than by losing a great Part of the Confidence which many of his best Subjects before had in his Moderation; which Loss made the Remainder of his Reign uneasy to him, and to every good Man who saw it. I remember, all Men then declared against a Standing Army, and the Courtiers, amongst the rest, who were only for a Land-Force, to be kept up no longer than till the King of France disbanded his, and till the Kingdom was settled, and the People better satisfied with the Administration; and then there was nothing left to do, in order to perpetuate them, but to take care that the People should never be satisfied; An Art often practis'd with an amazing Success.

The Reasons then given for keeping up an Army were, the great Number of Jacobites, the Disaffection of the Clergy and Universities, the Power and Enmity of France, and the Necessity of preserving so excellent a Body of Troops to maintain the Treaty of Partition, which they had newly and wisely made; But notwithstanding the Army was disbanded;

ed; no Plot, Conspiracy, or Rebellion, happen'd by their disbanding: The Partition-Treaty was broke; a new Army was rais'd, which won Ten times as many Victories as the former, and Europe, at last, is settled upon a much better Foot than it would have been by the Partition-Treaty. The Emperor is as strong as he ought to be. The Dutch have a good Barrier. Another Power is rais'd in Europe to keep the Ballance even, which neither can nor will be formidable to us without our own Fault; France is undone, and the Regent must be our Friend, and have Dependence upon our Protection; so that some few of these Reasons are to do now, what altogether could not do then, tho' we are not the tenth Part so well able to maintain them as we were then.

I should be glad to know in what Situation of our Affairs it can be safe, to reduce our Troops to the usual Guards and Garrisons, if it cannot be done now: There is no Power in Europe considerable enough to threaten us, who can have any Motives to do so, if we pursue the old Maxims and natural Interest of Great Britain; which is, To meddle no farther with Foreign Squabbles, than to keep the Ballance even between France and Spain: And this is less necessary too for us to do now, than formerly; because the Emperor and Holland are able to do it, and must and will do it without us, or at least with but little of our Assistance; but if we unnecessarily engage against the Interests of either, we must thank ourselves, if they endeavour endeavour to prevent the Effects of it, by finding us Work at Home.

When the Army was disbanded in King William's Reign, a Prince was in Being who was personally known to many of his former Subjects, and had obliged great Numbers of them; who was supported by One of the most powerful Monarchs in the World, that had won numerous Victories, and had almost always defeated his Enemies, and who still preserved his Power and his Animosity: His pretended Son was then an Infant, and for any Thing that then appear'd, might have proved an active and a dangerous Enemy, and it was to be fear'd, that his Tutors might have educated him a half Protestant, or at least have taught him to have disguis'd his true Religion: At that Time, the Revolution, and Revolution-Principles, were in their Infancy; and most of the Bishops and dignified Clergy, as well as many others in Employment, owed their Preferments and Principles to the abdicated Family, and the Reverse of this, is our Case now.

France has been torn to Pieces by numerous Defeats, its People and Manufactures destroy'd by War, Famine, the Plague, and their Mississippi Company; and they are so divided at Home, that they will find enough to do to save themselves without troubling their Neighbours, and especially a Neighbour from whom the governing Powers there, hope for Protection. The Prince, who pretended to the Thrones of these Kingdoms, is dead; and he who calls himself his Heir is a bigotted Papist;

and has given but little Cause to fear any Thing from his Abilities or his Prowess. The Principles of Liberty are now well understood, and few People in this Age, are Romantick enough to venture their Lives and Estates for the personal Interests of one they know nothing of, or nothing to his Advantage; and we ought to take Care that they shall not find their own Interest in doing it; and, I conceive, nothing is necessary to effect this, but to resolve upon it. Almost all the dignified Clergy, and all the Civil and Military Officers in the Kingdom, owe their Preferments to the Revolution, and are as Loyal to his Majesty as he himself can wish. A very great Part of the Property of the Kingdom stands upon the same Bottom with the Revolution. Every Day's Experience, shews us how devoted the Nobility are to gratify their King's just Desires and Inclinations; and nothing can be more certain, than that the present House of Commons, are most dutifully and affectionately inclin'd to the true Interest of the Crown, and to the Principles to which his Majesty owes it. And besides all this Security, a new Conspiracy has been discovered and defeated; which gives full Occasion and Opportunity to prevent any such Attempts for the future; which can never be done, but by punishing the present Conspirators, and giving no Provocation to new ones; in both which, I hope, we shall have the hearty Concurrence of those who have the Honour to be employ'd by his Majesty; by which they will shew, that they are as zealous to prevent the Necessity of Standing

Standing Armies, as I doubt not but the Parliament will be.

I presume, no Man will be audacious enough to propose, that we should make a Standing Army Part of our Constitution; and, if not, When can we reduce them to a competent Number better than at this Time? Shall we wait till France has recover'd its present Difficulties; till it's King is grown to full Age and Ripeness of Judgment; till he has dissipated all Factions and Discontents at Home, and is fallen into the natural Interests of his Kingdom, or perhaps aspires to Empire again? Or shall we wait till the Emperor, and King of Spain, have divided the Bear's Skin, and possibly become good Friends, as their Predecessors have been for the greatest Part of two Centuries, and perhaps cement that Friendship, by uniting for the common Interests of their Religion? Or till Madam Sobiesky's Heir is of Age, who may have Wit enough to think, that the Popish Religion is dearly bought at the Price of Three Kingdoms? Or are we never to Disband, till Europe is settled according to some modern Schemes? Or till there are no Malecontents in England, and no People out of Employments who desire to be in them.

'Tis certain, that all Parts of Europe which are enslaved, have been enslaved by Armies, and 'tis absolutely impossible, that any Nation which keeps them amongst themselves, can long preserve their Liberties; nor can any Nation perfectly lose their Liberties, who are without, such Guests: And yet, though all Men see this, and at Times confess it, yet all have join'd, in their Turns, to bring this heavy Evil upon themselves and their Country. Charles the Second, formed his Guards into a little Army, and his Successor encreased them to three or four Times their Number; and without doubt these Kingdoms had been enslaved, if known Events had not prevented it. We had no sooner escaped these Dangers, but King William's Ministry form'd Designs for an Army again, and neglected Ireland (which might have been reduced by a Message) till the Enemy was so strong, that a great Army was necessary to recover it; and when all was done abroad, that an Army was wanted for, they thought it convenient to find some Employment for them at Home. However, the Nation happened not to be of their Mind, and disbanded the greatest Part of them, without finding any of these Dangers they were threatned with from their Disbanding. A new Army was raised again, when it became necessary, and disbanded again, when there was no more Need of them; and his present Majesty came peaceably to his Crowns, by the Laws alone, notwithstanding all the Endeavours to keep him out, by long Measures concerted to that Purpose.

It could not be expected, from the Nature of human Affairs, that those who had formed a Design for restoring the Pretender, had taken such large Steps towards it, and were sure to be supported in it by so powerful an Assistance as France was then capable of giving, should immediately lose Sight of so agreeable

a Prospect of Wealth and Power, as they had before enjoyed in Imagination ; yet it seems very plain to me, that all the Disturbance which, afterwards happen'd, might have been prevented by a few timely Remedies ; and when at last it was defeated with a vast Charge and Hazard, we had the Means in our Hands, of rooting out all Seeds of Faction and future Rebellions, without doing any Thing to provoke them ; and 'tis certain, his Majesty was ready to do every Thing on his Part to that Purpose, which others over and over promised us ; and what they have done, besides obliging the Nation with a Septennial Parliament, encreasing the publick Debts a great many Millions, and by the South-Sea Project paying them off, I leave to themselves to declare.

However, I confess, an Army at last became necessary, and an Army was raised Time enough to beat all who opposed it : Some of them have been knock'd on the Head, many carried in Triumph, some hang'd, and others confiscated, as they well deserved ; and, I presume, the Nation would scarce have been in the Humour to have kept up an Army to fight their Ghosts, if a terrible Invasion had not threatned us from Sweden, which however, was at last frightned into a Fleet of Colliers, or Naval Stores, indeed I have forgot which. This Danger being over, another succeeded, and had like to have stole upon us from Cales, notwithstanding all the Intelligence we could possibly get from Gibraltar, which lyes just by it ; and this shews, by the way, the little Use of that Place : But we have miraculously escaped that Danger too; the greatest Part of their Fleet was dispersed in a Storm, and our Troops have actually defeated in the Highlands, some Hundreds of the Enemy, before many People would believe they were there. Since this, we have been in great Fear of the Czar; and last Year, one Reason given by many for continuing the Army was, to preserve us against the Plague.

But now the King of Sweden is dead, the Czar is gone a Sophi-hunting, the Plague is ceased, and the King of Spain's best Troops have taken up their Quarters in Italy, where (if I guess right) they will have Employment enough, and what are we to keep up the Army now to do, unless to keep out the Small Pox? Oh! but there is a better Reason than that, namely, a Plot is discovered, and we can't find out yet all who are concerned in it, but we have pretty good Assurance, that all the Jacobites are for the Pretender, and therefore we ought to keep in Readiness a great Number of Troops, (who are to sleep on Horseback, or lye in their Jack-Boots) which may be sufficient to beat them all together, if they had a Twelvemonth's Time given them to beat up for Volunteers, to buy Horses and Arms, to form themselves into Regiments, and exercise them; lest, instead of lurking in Corners, and prating in Taverns, and at Cock-Matches, they should surprise Ten or Twelve Thousand armed Men in their Quarters: I dare appeal to any unprejudiced Person, whether this is not the Sum of some Mens Reasonings upon this Subject?

But

But I desire to know of these sagacious Gentlemen, in what Respect shall we be in a worse State of Defence than we are now, if the Army was reduced to the same Number as in King William's Time, and in the latter End of the Queen's Reign, and that it consisted of the same Proportion of Horse and Foot, that every Regiment had its compleat Number of Troops and Companies, and every Troop and Company had its Complement of private Men? 'Tis certain, upon any sudden Exigency, his Majesty would have as many Men at command as he has now, and, I presume, more common Soldiers, who are most difficultly to be got upon such Occasions; for Officers will never be wanting, and all that are now regimented will be in Half-pay, and ready at Call to beat up and raise new Regiments, as fast as the others could be filled up, and they may change any of the old Men into them; which reduces it to the same Thing: By this we shall save the Charge of double or treble Officering our Troops, and the Terror of keeping up the Corps of Thirty or forty thousand Men, though they are called only Thirteen or Fourteen; and sure it is high Time to save all which can be saved, and, by removing all Causes of Jealousy, to unite all, who for the Cause of Liberty, are zealous for the present Establishment, in order to oppose effectually those who would destroy it.

I will suppose, for once, what I will not grant, that those call'd Whigs, are the only Men amongst us who are heartily attached to his Majesty's Interest; for I believe the greatest Part of the Tories, and the Clergy too, would tremble at the Thought of Popery and Arbitrary Power; which must come in with the Pretender: But taking it to be otherwise, 'tis certain, that the Body of the Whigs, and indeed I may say almost all, except the Possessors and Candidates for Employments or Pensions, have as terrible Apprehensions of a Standing Army, as the Tories themselves; and dare any Man lay his Hand upon his Heart and say, That his Majesty will find greater Security in a few Thousand more Men already regimented, than in the Steady Affections of so many Hundred Thousands who will be always ready to be regimented: When the People are easy and satisfied, the whole Kingdom is his Army; and King James found what Dependance there was upon his Troops, when his People deserted him. Would not any wise and honest Minister desire, during his Administration, that the Publick Affairs should run glibly, and find the hearty Concurrence of the States of the Kingdom, rather than to carry their Measures by perpetual Struggles and Entrigues, to waste the Civil List by constant and needless Pensions and Gratuities, be always asking for new Supplies, and rend'ring themselves, and all who assist them, odious to their Country-men?

In short, there can be but two Ways in Nature to govern a Nation, one is by their own Consent, and the other by Force: One gains their Hearts, and the other holds their Hands; The first is always chosen by those who

who design to govern the People for the People's Interest, and the other by those who design to oppress them for their own; for whoever desires only to protect them, will covet no useless Power to injure them: There is no fear of a People's acting against their own Interest, when they know what it is, and when, through ill Conduct or unfortunate Accidents, they become dissatisfied with their present Condition, the only effectual Way to avoid the threatening Evil, is to remove their Grievances.

When Charles Duke of Burgundy, with most of the Princes of France, at the Head of an Hundred Thousand Men, took up Arms against Lewis the Eleventh, that Prince sent an Embassy to Sforza Duke of Milan, desiring that he would lend him some of his Veteran Troops; and the Duke returned him for Answer, That he could not be content to have them cut to Pieces, (as they would assuredly have been) but told him at the same Time, That he would send him some Advice which would be worth Ten times as many Troops as he had; namely, That he should give Satisfaction to the Princes, and then they would disperse of Course; and the King improv'd so well upon the Advice, that he diverted the Storm, by giving but little Satisfaction to the Princes, and none at all to those who follow'd them: The Body of the People in all Countries are so desirous to live in quiet, that a few good Words, and a little good Usage from their Governors, will at any Time pacify them, and make them very often turn upon those Benefactors, who by their Pains, Expence, and Hazard, have obtained those Advantages for them; and indeed, when they are not outrageously oppress'd and starved, are almost as ready to part with their Liberties, as others are to ask for them.

By what I have before said, I would not be understood, to declare absolutely against continuing our present Forces, or increasing them, if the Importance of the Occasion requires either; and the Evils threaten'd, are not yet dissipated: But I could wish, that if such an Occasion appears, those who think them at this Time necessary, would declare effectually, and in the fullest Manner, that they design to keep them no longer than during the present Emergency; and that, when it is over, they will be as ready to break them, as I believe the Nation will be to give them, when just Reasons offer themselves for doing so.

S I R,

THINGS of the greatest seeming Difficulty, appear the easiest to us when found out. There was no Wit necessary to set an Egg on one End, when Columbus had shewn the Way. Jugglers do many Things by sight of Hand, which to a gaping Beholder appear to be Witchcraft; and when he knows how they are done, wonders at himself for for wondring at them. A Ship as big as a Castle is sail'd by a Rudder and a Puff of Wind; and a Weight, which a thousand Men can't move, may be easily manag'd by one, with the Help of Wheels and Pullies. The same is true in the Direction of Mankind, who will be always caught by a skilful Application to their Passions and their Weaknesses, and will be easily drawn into what they will be very difficultly driven. The fiercest Horses are subdued by the right Management of the Bit; the most furious wild Beasts tamed by gratifying their Appetites, or working upon their Fears; and the most savage Tempers are made tractable by soothing their Foibles, or knowing how to manage their Pannicks.

This is what is call'd the Knowledge of Mankind, which very few of them know any thing of. Pedants hope to govern them by Distinctions and grave Faces; Tyrants by Force and Terror; and Philosophers by solemn Lectures of Morality and Virtue. And these have certainly a Share in influencing their Minds, and determining their Actions: but, altogether, not half so much as applying to their reigning Appetites, appearing Interests, and predominant Foibles, and taking artful Advantages of favourable Opportunities, and catching at lucky Conjunctures, to effect at once what a long Series of wise Councils, and the best concerted Measures, cannot bring about.

Wise Statesmen well understand this Foible in human Nature, and, often take Advantage from a Plot discover'd, or a Rebellion quell'd;

quell'd; from the Transports of a Restoration, or a Victory obtain'd; or, during the Terrors of a pestilential Distemper, or the Rage of a prevailing Faction, or the Fears of a desponding one, to accomplish what neither Threats nor Armies could extort, nor Bribes nor Allurements persuade.

The same Advantages have been as luckily taken by the Leaders of popular Parties, upon sudden Discontents and unsuccessful Acts of Power, to obtain Concessions and Privileges which they durst not think of, much less hope for, at other Times. My Lord Clarendon furnishes us with many Instances of such Concessions, which neither the Crown would have granted, nor the People been prevail'd upon to ask, nor perhaps accept before, or possibly after. Whereas a preposterous and ill-tim'd Attempt, on either Side, would have increas'd the Power they design'd to lessen, or take away. The greatest Secret in Politicks is to drive the Nail that will go.

If we hear a Southsayer, Poet, or Philosopher, talk of the Dignity of human Nature, Man is lifted up to a Resemblance with his great Creator: He is Lord of the Universe; all Things are made for his Use, even such as are of no Use to him, but do him Mischief. The Sun is placed in the Firmament to ripen his Cabbage, and dry his Linnen; and infinite Millions of Stars are stuck there, many thousand Times bigger than the Earth, to supply the want of Farthing Candles, though vastly many of them are not to be seen but by Glasses, and, without doubt, infinite others not

not to be seen with them. He is made wise, discerning, form'd for Virtue, mutual Help and Assistance; and probably it was all true before the Fall: But as he is now degenerated, I fear the Reverse of all is true. It is plain that he is foolish, helpless, perfidious, impotent, easily misled and trepann'd, and, for the most Part, caught by as thin Snares and little Wiles as his Fellow Creatures, which, we are told, are made for his Use; and his boasted Faculty of Reason betrays him to some, from which the others are exempt.

True Reason has little to do in his Speculations or his Actions. Enthusiasm or Pannick Fear often supplies the Place of Religion in him: Obstinacy is call'd Constancy; and Indifference Moderation: His Passions, which direct and govern all the Motions of his Mind, seem to me to be purely mechanical, which perhaps I may shew more at Large hereafter; and whoever would govern him, and lead him, must apply to those Passions, that is, pull the proper Ropes, and turn the Wheels which will put the Machine in Motion. When Chrisyppus was introduc'd into the Presence of Dionysius, and, according to the Custom of that Court, fell upon his Face, and kiss'd the Oppressor's Feet; he was ask'd by Plato, How he, who was a Greek, a free Man, and a Philosopher, could fall prostrate before a Tyrant, and adore him? He answer'd merrily, That he had Business with the Tyrant; and if his Ears were in his Feet, he must speak to him where his Ears lay.

Now

Now most People's Ears lie in the wrong Place, and whoever will be heard must apply accordingly : We rarely see a wife Man who does not carry a Half-Fool about him ; that by soothing his Vanities, flattering his Passions, and taking Advantages of his other Weaknesses, can do more with him than all the World besides ; and indeed most Men are govern'd by those who have less Wit than themselves, or by what ought least to influence them. Men, like other Animals, are caught by Springs, Wires, or Subtilties : Foxes are trappan'd by Traces, Pheasants by a red Rag, and other Birds by a Whistle ; and the same is true of Mankind.

A lucky Thought, a Jest, a fortunate Accident, or a jovial Debauch, shall bring about Designs and Revolutions in human Affairs, which twenty Legions in the Field could not bring about. A filthy Strumpet made Alexander, for a Kiss, burn Persopolis, the august Seat of the Persian Empire ; and I have heard somewhere or other, of a great Prince, who being prevail'd upon to swear by his Mistress's Bum, That he would dissolve the States of his Kingdom, he religiously kept that Oath against his Interest, tho' he never valu'd all the rest he took upon the Evangelists. How often hath a merry Story in our Days turn'd a Debate, when the most grave and solemn Arguments, and the most obvious Representations of publick Advantage, could not prevail ? And how many a fair and accomplish'd Lady has been won by bribing her Chamber-Maid, when perhaps all the Sollicitations of her her Parents and Relations, and all the Motives of Self-Interest would have prov'd ineffectual.

The lucky adjusting of Times and Seasons, taking Advantage of prevailing Prejudices and Pannicks, and knowing how to humour and lay hold of the predominant Enthusiasms of human Nature, has given Birth to most of the Revolutions in Religion and Politicks which ever happen'd in the World. A Juggler swallowing Bibles and Hour-Glasses, shall do more with a modern Mob than a Philosopher; and a Scarecrow Prater, with distorted Limbs and Understanding, shall make Thousands of them weep and wring their Hands, when the Oratory of Demosthenes, or the Reasonings of Mr. Lock, shall make them laugh or hoot. There is a certain Assimilation of Passions and Faculties in Men, which attract one another when they meet, and always strike together, as when two Fiddles are tun'd up to the same Pitch; if you hit the one, the other sounds: So Men are easiest operated upon by those of like Understandings with their own, or those who the best know how to dally and play with their Foibles, and can do the same Thing with Design as the others do naturally.

I doubt not but I shall be censur'd for making thus bold with this Lord of the Creation, by those who make much more bold with him on other Occasions, and who would have the Monopoly of enjoying all the Scandal to themselves: But, by the leave of those solemn Gentlemen, I shall take the Liberty of considering sidering Man as he is, since it is out of our Power to give a Model, to have him new made by.

Since then by the Sins of our first Parents, we are fallen into this unhappy and forlorn Condition, all wise and honest Men are oblig'd in Prudence and Duty, not only by Lectures of Philosophy, Religion, and Morals, to fashion this Sovereign of the Universe into his true Interest, but to make use of his Weaknesses to render him happy, as wicked Men do to make him miserable; in which I shall be more particular hereafter.

S I R,

MMORALITY, or moral Virtues, are certain Rules of mutual Convenience or Indulgence, conducive or necessary to the well-being of Society. Most of these are obvious; for every Man knows what he desires himself; which is to be free from Oppression, and the Insults of others, and to enjoy the Fruits of his own Acquisitions, arising from his Labour or Invention. And since he can have no Reason to expect this Indulgence to himself, unless he allows it to others, who have equal Reason to expect it from him, it is the common Interest of all, who unite together in the same Society, to establish such Rules and Maxims for their mutual mutual Preservation, that no Man can oppress or injure another, without suffering by it himself. As far as these Rules are discoverable by the Light of Reason, or that Portion of Understanding, which most, or all Men have, they are call'd Morality: But when they are the Productions of deeper Thought, or the Inventions only of Men of greater Sagacity, they are call'd Political Knowledge. But as Men are often in such a Situation in respect of one another, that the Stronger can oppress the Weaker, without any fear of having the Injury return'd; and most Men will pursue their personal Advantage independent from all others; therefore Almighty God, in Compassion to Mankind, has annex'd Rewards and Punishments to the Observance or Non-observance of these Rules: The Belief of which, and a Practice pursuant to it, is call'd Religion.

I have often read, with Pleasure, pretty speculative Discourses upon the intrinsic Excellence of Virtue, and of its having a real Existence independent of human Considerations, or worldly Relations: But when I have been able to forget, or lay aside the Dalliances and Amusements of Fancy, and the beautiful Turns of Expression, I could consider it philosophically, only as an empty Sound, when detach'd and separated from natural, national, or religious Politicks; unless in some few Instances, where Constitution, and innate Tenderness, engage Men to pity others in Ease to themselves, which is call'd Humanity.

ALL

All cardinal and private Virtues are Branches of these general Politicks. - Fortitude enables us to defend our selves and others. Compassion is a Fellow-feeling of Calamities which we may suffer ourselves; and it is evident that People feel them in proportion, as they are likely to suffer the same or the like Calamities. Charity obliges us to give that Relief to others, which we, our Friends, or Relations, may want for ourselves. And Temperance and Frugality are necessary to the Preservation of our Bodies and Estates, and being useful Members of Society. I freely confess, that for my Part I can find out no other Motives in my self, or others, for these Affections or Actions, except Constitution, Ostentation, of temporal or religious Politicks, which are, in other Words, our present or eternal Interests; and I shall own my self beholden to any else who can find out any other; for there cannot be too many Motives for a virtuous Life.

How far the Systematical Gentlemen will agree with me in this speculative Philosophy, I do not know, nor shall think my self much concern'd to enquire; but 'tis certain their Practice, and many of the Doctrines they teach, confirm what I have said. I think all Mankind, except the Bramins, and the Transmigrators of Souls in the East, do agree, that we may destroy other Animals for Food and Convenience, and sometimes for Pleasure, or, to prevent but trifling Prejudice, to our selves, tho' they have the same, or very near the same, Organizations as we have, equal or greater Sensations of Pleasure and Pain, and many of them them Sagacity and Reasoning enough to overreach and circumvent us ; nor are they guilty of any other Crime, than that of acting according to their Natures, and preserving their Beings by such Food as is necessary to their Existence.

Indeed, as Things stand at present, tho' we had not Revelation for it, we may be very sure that God Almighty has given us Dominion over other Creatures, because he has actually given us the Power, in a good measure, to destroy and preserve them, as far as they may be hurtful or useful to us ; and therefore we think them not Objects of moral Duties, because we can hurt them, and they cannot make Reprizals, or equal Reprizals, upon us : But if Almighty God had thought fit to have given to Lyons and Tygers the Use of Speech, Length of Life, to have gain'd more Experience, and had form'd their Claws and Hands to write and communicate that Experience, and by such Means had enabled them to have form'd themselves into Societies for mutual Defence against Mankind (whom they could quickly have destroyed, though only by confining and starving them in Inclosures and Fortifications.) I say, in such a Circumstance of Affairs, will any Man affirm, that it would not have been our Interest and Duty to have treated them with Morality and social Offices : I doubt, in such a Case, they would have told us, and have made us feel too, that they were not made only for our Use.

I will suppose, for once, a Dialogue between his Holiness and a Lyon, since Poets
and:

and some others have inform'd us, that Beasts have spoken formerly; and I am sure they were never more concern'd to speak than upon the present Occasion.

Pope. Thou art an ugly four-footed Monster, and thou livest upon the Destruction of thy Fellow Animals.

Lyon. I am as Nature has made me, which has given me many Faculties beyond yourself. I have more Courage, more Strength, more Activity, and better Senses of Seeing, Hearing, &c. than you have: Nor do I destroy the hundredth Part of my Fellow-Animals in Comparison with those you destroy. I never destroy my own Species, unless I am provok'd; but you destroy yours for Pride, Vanity, Luxury, Envy, Covetousness, and Ambition.

Pope. But thou art a great Gormandizer, and eatest up all our Victuals, which was design'd for the Use of Men only; and therefore thou oughtest to be exterminated.

Lyon. Nature, which gave me Life, design'd me the Means of Living; and she has given me Claws and Teeth for that Purpose, namely, to defend my self against some Animals, and to kill and eat others for my Sustainance; and, amongst the rest, your Reverence, if I cannot get younger and better Food. You Men, indeed, may eat and live comfortably upon the Fruits of Trees, and the Herbs and Corn of the Field; but we are so formed, as to receive Support and Nourishment only from the Flesh of other Animals.

Pope. Sirrah, thou hast no Soul.

Lyon.

Lyon. The greater is my Misfortune. However, I have a Mind and Body, and have the more Reason to take Care of them, having nothing else to take Care of; and you ought the less to deprive and rob me of the little Advantages Nature has given me; you who enjoy so much greater yourself.

Pope. The Earth was given to the Saints; for (as St. Austin very judiciously observes) the Wicked have Right to nothing, and the Godly to all Things; and thou art certainly a very wicked Animal, and no true Believer.

Lyon. I have heard indeed before, that such Reasonings will pass amongst you Men, who have Faculties to reason yourselves out of Reason; but we Beasts know better Things: For having nothing but our Senses to trust to, and wanting the Capacities to distinguish ourselves out of them, we cannot be perswaded to believe, that those who have no more Honesty, and less Understanding than their Neighbours, have a Right to their Goods, and to starve them, by pretending to believe what the others do not understand; therefore, Worthy Doctor, you shall catch no Gudgeons here: You may brew as you bake amongst one another, but you will find no such Bubbles amongst us.

Pope. In short, thou art a sniveling faucy Jackanapes, and a great Rogue and Murderer; and I wish thou hadst a Soul that I might damn it, and send thee to the Devil.

Lyon. Not half so great a Rogue as yourself, Good Doctor, nor so great a Murderer. You do more Mischief in a Year than all the

166: CATO'S LETTERS.

Lions in the World did since the Creation. We kill only with our Teeth and Claws ; you use a thousand Instruments of Death and Destruction. We kill single Animals ; you kill by wholesale, and destroy Hecatombs at once ; we kill for Food and Necessity ; you kill for Sport and Pastime, and out of Wantonness, and to do your selves no Good. In fine, you murder or oppress all other Animals, and one another too.

Pope. Rascal, thou art made for my Use, and I will make thee know it, and order thee to be immediately knock'd on the Head for thy Skin, thou Varlet, and Beast for Satan.

Lyon. I'll try that presently.

Pope, (crossing himself.) Jesu ! Maria ! (Exit in haste.)

Lyon. Farewell, thou Lord of the Creation, and Sovereign of the Universe.

I believe I may venture to say, if Lions could speak, they would talk at this Rate, and his Holiness but little better. But to return to my Subject.

I have said, That all, or most of Mankind act upon the former Principles, and, without the Motives of Religion, can find out no Reason to hope they should ever act otherwise ; and I am sorry to say, that Religion itself has yet wanted Power enough to influence them (for the most Part) to contrary Sentiments or Actions. What Nation or Society does not oppress another when they can do it with Security, without Fear of Retaliation, or being affected by it in their own Interests, with with Regard to their Correspondence with other States? It is plain, all social Duties are here at an End; for what is call'd the Law of Nations, are only Rules of mutual Intercourse with one another, without which they could have no Intercourse at all, but must be in constant Course of War and Depredation; and therefore, whenever any State is in no Condition to repel Injuries, nor can have Protection from any other, who are concern'd to preserve them, constant Experience shews us, That they become the Prey of a greater, who think themselves obliged to keep no Measures with them, nor want Pretences from Religion or their own Interests to oppress them. Father Austin's Distinction is always at Hand when they can get no better, and for the most part (if not always) they find Men of Reverence to thank God for their Roguery.

Since therefore Men ever have, and, I doubt, ever will, act upon these Motives, they ought not to be amused by the Play of Words, and the Sallies of Imagination, whilst designing Men pick their Pockets; but ought to establish their Happiness, by wise Precautions, and upon solid Maxims, and, by prudent and fix'd Laws, make it all Mens Interest to be honest; without which, I doubt, few Men will be so.

I am, &c.

S I R,

WE have been long confounded about the Origin of Good and Evil, or, in other Words, of Virtue and Vice. The Opinion of some is, that Virtue is a sort of real Being, and subsists in its own Nature. Others make it to consist in Rules or Cautions, given us by the supreme Being for our Conduct here on Earth, and either implanted in our Natures, or conveyed to us by Revelation. A late Philosopher fetches it from the Will and Commands of the civil Magistrate; but, for my own Part, I must conceive it only as a Compound of the two last; namely, a Relation of Mens Actions to one another, either dictated by Reason, by the Precepts of Heaven, or the Commands of the Sovereign, acting according to his Duty.

It is the Misfortune of those publick-spirited and acute Gentlemen, who have oblig'd the World with Systems, that they always make common Sense truckle to them; and when they are bewilder'd, and entangled amongst Briars and Thorns, they never go back the Way they got in, but resolve to scramble through the Brake, leap over Hedge and Ditch, to get into their old Road, and so for the most part scratch themselves from Head to Foot, and sometimes break their Necks into the Bargain. They never look back, and examine whether their System is true or false, but set themselves to work to prove it at all Adventures: They are determined to solve all Contradictions, and grow very angry with all who are not so clear sighted as themselves.

This seems to me to be the Case in the present Question. The common Light of Reason has told all Mankind, that there cannot be an Effect without a Cause; and that every Cause must be an Effect of some superior Cause, till they come to the last of all, which can be no otherwise than self-existent, that is, must have existed from all Eternity. Some Sects of Philosophers have thought this first Cause to be only pure Matter, not being able to conceive that any thing can be made out of nothing, or can be annihilated again afterwards; and they suppose that Matter has been in eternal Motion, and has the Seeds of Animals, Vegetables, and of every thing else within itself, and by its constant Motion and Revolutions, gives to them Life, Duration, and at last Death; and throws them into the Womb of Nature again to rise up in new Shapes.

But others, by far the greatest part of Mankind, are not able by this dark System to account for the exquisite Contrivance and consummate Wisdom shewn in the Formation of Animals and Vegetables, in the regular and stupendious Structure and Circulation of the heavenly Bodies, and of the Earth, no more than for the Operations of our own Minds; and therefore must reasonably judge, that when so much Contrivance is necessary to bring about our own little Designs; the great Machine of Heaven and Earth, and the infinite and admirable Systems in it, could not be the spontaneous or necessary Productions of blind Matter; and therefore determine, that the first Being must have suitable Wisdom to contrive and execute these great and amazing Works.

But these latter are not so well agreed amongst themselves about the Manner of Acting, or the Operations of this Being. For some think that he must act from the Necessity of his own Nature: For since his Being is necessary, they think that his Will and Attributes, (which are Parts of his Being, essential to it, and inseparable from it) and consequently his Actions, which are Results of that Will, and of those Attributes, must be necessary too. They cannot conceive how a Being, who has the Principles and Causes of all Things within itself, could exist without having seen every thing intuitively from all Eternity; which must have excluded Choice and Preference in his Actions, which implies Doubt and Deliberation.

They cannot apprehend how Reason and Wisdom can be analogous in him to what are call'd by the same Names in Men: For Judgment in them, as far as it regards their own voluntary Operations, is only the Balance of the Conveniences or Inconveniences which will result from their own or others Thoughts or Actions, as they have relation to Beings or Events out of their Power, and which depend upon other Causes: But if a Being can have no Causes without itself, but produces every Thing by its own Energy and Power, sees all Things at once, and cannot err, as Men may, nor consequently deliberate and debate with itself; they think it must act singly, and in one Way only; and where there is no Choice, or, which is the same thing, but one Choice, they conceive there is always Necessity.

But the contrary is much the more orthodox and religious Opinion, and has been held by far the greatest and best Part of Mankind in all Ages before, and without Revelation: They have thought this last Opinion border'd too much upon the material System, as being able to see but little Difference in the Operations of a Being acting necessarily, and the Productions of blind Matter constantly in Action, and acting mechanically; since the Effect is supposed to be the same, tho' Wisdom and Contrivance, or what we are forc'd to call by those Names for want of another, are the first Spring, or chief Wheel of the Machine, or one Link of the Chain of Causes: And therefore Men have condemned this Opinion as impious and atheistical.

Indeed the other Speculations have been only the wild and babbling Notions of Fairy Philosophers, or of enthusiastick and visionary Madmen; for all prudent and modest Men pretend to know no more of this Being, without Revelation, than that he is wise, good, and powerful, and made all Things, and do not presume farther to enquire into the Modus of his Existence and Operations. However, their own Interest and Curiosity were so much

concern'd to guess at his Designs and Motives in placing them here, that it was impossible they could be otherwise than solicitous and inquisitive about it; and finding, or fancying themselves to be the most valuable Part of the Whole, it was very natural for them to believe that all was made for their Sakes, and that their Happiness was the only or chief View of the supreme Being.

With these Thoughts about him, every Man knowing what he had a Mind to have himself, and what he believ'd would constitute his own Happiness, and not being able to attain it without making the same Allowance to other People; Men agreed upon equal Rules of mutual Convenience and Protection, and finding these Rules dictated to them by impartial Reason, they justly believ'd they were implanted within them by the Deity; and as they expected themselves Returns of Gratitude or Applause for Benefits conferr'd by them upon others, they thought the same were due to the original Being, who gave to them Life, and every thing else they enjoy'd: And this is call'd Natural Religion.

But as the Motive, which Men had to enter into this equal Agreement, was their own Pleasure and Security, which most or all Men prefer before the Advantage of others, so they often found themselves in a Condition, by superior Power, Will, and Abilities, to circumvent those who had less than themselves, either by artful Confederacies, Impositions, or by downright Force, to oppress them; and in order to it, have invented Systems or partial Schemes

Schemes of separate Advantage, and have annex'd suitable Promises or Menaces to them ; All which they have pretended to receive from this Divine Being : They assum'd to have Communication with him, and to know his Will, and denounc'd his Anger against all who would not take their Word, and let them do by his Authority, what they would never have been permitted to do by any other ; and the Herd not daring to oppose them, or not knowing how, have acquiesced in their Tales, and come in Time to believe them. From hence sprang all the Follies and Roguery of the Heathen and Jewish Priests, and all the false Religions in the World ; with all the Persecutions, Devastations, and Massacres caused by them ; which were all heterogeneous Engraftments upon Natural Religion.

Almighty God thought it proper therefore at last to communicate himself again to Man, and by immediate Revelation to confirm what he at first implanted in all Mens Minds, and what was eradicated thence by Delusion and Imposture ; but though he thought it not necessary to tell us more than we were concern'd to know, namely, to do our Duty to himself and to one another, yet we will still be prying into his Secrets, and sifting into the Causes of his original and eternal Decrees, which are certainly just and reasonable, tho' we neither know his Reasons, nor could judge of them, if we did.

From hence arises this Dispute concerning the Origin of Good and Evil, amongst a thousand others, for our Vanity inducing us to fancy our selves the sole Objects of his Providence, and being sure we receive our Beings from him, and consequently our Sensations, Affections, and Appetites, which are Parts of them, and which evidently depend either mediately or immediately upon Causes without us, and seeing at the same Time, that many Things happen in the World seemingly against his reveal'd Will, which he could prevent if he thought fit; we either recur to the Intrigues of a contrary Being, whose Business it is to thwart his Designs, and disappoint his Providence, or else account for it by a Malignity in human Nature, more prone to do Evil than Good, without considering from whence we had that Nature; for if the Malignity in it is greater than Precepts, Examples, or Exhortations can remove, the heavier Scale must weigh down.

How much more modest and reasonable would it be to argue, That moral Good and Evil in this World, are only Relations of our Actions to the supreme Being, and to one another, and would be nothing here below, if there were no Men? That no Event can happen in the Universe but what must have Causes strong enough to produce it? That all Causes must first or last center in the supreme Cause, who, from the Existence of his own Nature, must always do what is best, and all his Actions must be instantaneous Emanations of himself? He sees all Things at one View, and nothing can happen without his Leave and Permission, and without his giving Power enough to have it effected: Therefore when we see any thing which seems to contradict the Images which we have presum'd to form about his Essence, or the Attributes we bestow upon him, (which Images and Attributes are, for the most Part, borrowed from what we think most valuable amongst our selves,) we ought to suspect our own Ignorance, to know that we want Appetites to fathom infinite Wisdom, and to rest assur'd that all Things conduce to the Ends and Designs of his Providence, who always chuses the best Means to bring them about.

I am, &c.

S I R,

I HAVE already said, that I could consider Good and Evil only as in relation to Mens Actions to one another, or to the supreme Being; in which Actions they can have for their End their own Interest alone, in Present or Futurity. But when I consider these Ideas in regard to God, I must consider them as Objects of his Will, which can alone constitute Right or Wrong, tho' they may sometimes not quadrate with the Notions that we form of Justice amongst one another, and which are only prudent Rules for our own separate Convenience, and take in no Part of the Creation but our selves. We cannot enter into the Raisonnement of God's punishing all Mankind for the

Sin

Sin of their first Parents, which they could not help ; nor for his punishing all Israel with a Pestilence for the private Sin of David, which, without doubt, many of them condemn'd ; nor for his bringing Plagues upon the Egyptians, because he had harden'd Pharaoh's Heart ; no more than for his destroying all Mankind at the Deluge, for Crimes which he could have prevented ; and Multitudes of the like Instances in holy Writ besides, which we cannot account for by our weak Reasonings, (which have for their Object only our own Advantage ;) but we are very sure these Things were done, and rightly done ; and all conduc'd to some superior, wise, and just End. Almighty God judges of the Whole of Things, and we only of them as they regard our selves. The whole System of the Universe is his Care ; and all other inferior Beings must be subordinate to the Interests of this great One, and all contribute, in their several Stations and Actions, to bring about at last the grand Purposes of his Providence. Infinite Millions of Animals are born with the Morning Sun, and probably see old Age, and feel the Pangs of Death before Noon : Great Numbers of them by their Death preserve Life, or give Convenience to others, who otherwise could not live at all, or must live upon very ill Terms. Vegetables rise, grow, decay, die again, and get a new Resurrection in other Shapes. All Nature is in perpetual Rotation, and working through a thousand Revolutions to its last Period, and the Consummation of all Things, when its great Author will know how how to make all Individuals recompense for the Evils they have suffer'd here, and perhaps give us Faculties to know, admire, and glorify his Conduct, in those Instances which may seem most mysterious to our narrow Capacities in this frail State.

But this general and comprehensive System of the Universe, and this honourable Conception of the Deity, and Acquiescence in, and Submission to his Will, will not square with the Interests of particular Societies of Men, who think themselves concern'd to find out a System for themselves alone ; and therefore, to avoid those Consequences (which I can see no Purposes of Religion serv'd in avoiding) they compliment away his Power, Prescience and general Providence, to do Respect to the Notions they have pleas'd to conceive of his Justice, which they have thought fit to measure by their own Interests, or what they think best for themselves. They first determine what they desire to have ; then call it just, and immediately interest Heaven to bring it about ; and finding that it contradicts the Experience of Mankind, all the Notions they can conceive of the Workings of Providence, and the Nature of Things themselves, (which always operate from Cause to Effect) they set themselves to work to form a new Scheme at the Expence of denying all that they see, or can know.

In order to this, they have made Man the Primum Mobile, and his Mind the first Principle or Spring of all his Actions, independent of the Author of his Being, and of all the second Causes, which evidently influence and concur to determine his Resolutions and his Actions. They say, that Almighty God (who has infinite Justice and Power) having given to Mankind a Rule to act by, and annex'd Rewards or Menaces to the Observance or Non-observance of this Rule, has given a free, uncontroll'd, and impartial Liberty to him to determine, without being coerced or restrain'd by any other Power to do, or not to do an Action, or to chuse Good or Evil to himself: His Justice, they say, obliges him to this Conduct, and his Power enables him to execute and bring it to pass; and so by affecting to do Right to one Attribute of his, which they cannot understand, and which they may possibly mistake, by supposing it to be different from his Will, (which alone, as has been said, can constitute Right or Wrong) they take away and rob him of all or most of the rest.

His Prescience or Knowledge (from all Eternity) of every Event which does or can happen in the Universe, is denied at once; for whatever is contingent in its own Nature, and may or may not happen, cannot be foreseen; for when any Being sees that a Thing will be, it must be; for it is impossible to know that any Event will come to pass, that may not come to pass; and 'tis equally impossible to foresee an Effect without knowing the Causes which produce it. 'Tis no Irreverence to the supreme Being, to say, That he cannot do Impossibilities, and know Things which cannot be known; and 'tis certain he must must know all Things which can be known, because they all depend upon his Will.

It reflects upon his Wisdom or Power : Upon the first, as supposing he desires or intends to bring any Designs or Purposes to pass, and yet that he has not chosen the proper Methods to attain them ; or upon the latter, that he cannot attain them if he would ; it intrenches upon his Providence and Government of the Universe, by giving Part of his Power out of his own Hands, and by leaving it to the Discretion of inferior and weak Beings, to contradict himself and disappoint his Intentions : And even his Justice itself, to which all the rest are so freely sacrificed, is attack'd upon such Reasonings, in charging Almighty God with Severity in punishing Crimes committed through Weakness, Want, or predominant Appetites, and which he could have prevented by giving others. I do not see what has been or can be said to these Objections more, than that we are not to reason upon the Proceedings of Providence, which acts upon Motives and Maxims far above us, and which are not to be scan'd by our little Rules and scanty Capacities ; and if these Gentlemen could but be perswaded to reason thus at first, they would save themselves the Trouble of solving perpetual Contradictions.

For what can be more evident, than that the Actions of Man, which seem most spontaneous and free, depend upon his Will to do them ; and that that Will is directed by his reasoning Faculties, which depend again upon the good or ill Organization of his Body, upon his Complexion, the Nature of his Education, imbib'd Prejudices, State of Health, predominant Passions, Manner of Life, fortuitous Reasonings with others, different kinds of Diet, and the Thousands of Events, seeming Accidents, and the perpetual Objects which encompass him, and which every Day vary and offer themselves differently to him; all or most of which Causes, and many more which probably determine him, must be confess'd to be out of his Power. Constant Experience shews us, that Men differently constituted, or differently educated, will reason differently, and the same Men in different Circumstances. A Man will have different Sentiments about the same Things, in Youth, in middle Age, and in Dotage, in Sickness and in Health, in Liquor and Sobriety, in Wealth and in Poverty, in Power and out of it, and the Faculties of the Mind are visibly altered by Physick, Exercise, or Diet.
upon

The same Reason which is convincing to one Man, appears ridiculous to another, and to the same Man at different Times; and consequently, his or their Actions, which are Results of those Reasonings, will be different: And we not only all confess this, by endeavouring to work upon one another by these Mediums, but Heaven thinks fit to choose the same; for what else can be meant by offering Rewards and denouncing Punishments, but as Causes to produce the Effects design'd, that is, to save those whom Almighty God in his deep Wisdom has preordain'd to Bliss, and to be influenced by those Motives. We all confess, less, that no Man can do his Duty without the Grace of God, and whoever has the Grace of God will do his Duty. It is undoubtedly to be obtained by Prayer, but we must have Grace to pray for it; and I am not sensible that Almighty God does any other way give his Grace but by offering to us, or by laying in our Way sufficient Inducements to obey his Will: I am sure I can find none else in myself, or discover them in others, whatever the Enthusiastick and Visionary Gentlemen may do. I doubt much, that what they call Grace, is what I call Enthusiasm, or a strong Conceit or Perswasion of their own Godliness and Communication with the Deity.

What sort of Reasoning then is this, to say, that Heaven gives to every Man sufficient Power and Motives to chuse the best, which yet prove insufficient; that he has made every Man free to act or not to act by a Rule, and yet has plac'd him in such a Situation as to find a thousand Obstacles in his Way to that Freedom; and that he has given him a Judgment capable to determine right, and Opportunities rightly to exercise that Judgment; and yet by making use of that Judgment and those Opportunities, he often judges directly contrary: And all this is to make good a System, as yet owned but by a very small Part of Mankind, and for which I can find no Foundation in Reason and Scripture?

I must beg leave to think it very audacious in a small Number of Men, to determine the Workings of Providence by their own narrow Schemes; at the Expence too of condemning the

the Opinions and Reasonings of the greatest Part of the World in all Ages. All or most of the Sects of Philosophers in Greece and Rome, held Fate or Necessity as the several Sects amongst the Jews did, except the Essenes, a very small Sect indeed, not exceeding few thousands. The Mahometans, through the World, hold Predestination: The Calvinists, and some other Protestant Sects, hold it now; and I do not understand the Articles of the Church of England, if it is not the orthodox Opinion amongst us; and it certainly was held to be so, till a few Doctors in King James and Charles I's Time, advanc'd the contrary System, and who, in the Addresses of Parliament, were always, in those Reigns, rank'd with the Papists for doing so; and it is yet undoubtedly the Opinion of the common People thro' the World: However, I do not condemn any one who may think that this is derogatory to the Attributes of God, in a modest Manner to offer his Reasons against any Dogma ever so well establish'd, (which I think is the Right of all Mankind,) yet I could wish they would shew the same Modesty, in giving other People their Liberty of defending the contrary Opinion with the same good Intentions.

The most pregnant and usual Objection against this Doctrine is, That if Men are predestinated to eternal Bliss or Misery, their own Endeavours are useless, and they can have no Motives to prefer Good before Evil; which, I confess, will always be the Reasonings of Men who are predestinated to the latter, (if 'tis possible to suppose there can be any such;) but but those who are determined to the first, will always believe, that God takes proper Means to attain his Ends, and that he designs to save Men by the Medium of good Works, and of obeying his Will; and this Conviction will be an adequate Cause to produce such Obedience in those who are destined to Happiness. If the End is predestinated, the Means must be predestinated too. If a Man is to die in War, he must meet an Enemy; and if he is to be drown'd, he must come within the reach of Water; or if he is to be starv'd, he must not know how to come at any Victuals, or have no Mind to eat them, or Stomach to digest them.

As for my own part, I dare not believe, that the all-good, all-wise, and most merciful God, has determined any of his Creatures to endless Misery, by creating and forming them with such Appetites and Passions as naturally and necessarily produce it; though I think it to be fully consistent with his Power, Goodness, and Justice, to give Inclinations which may lead and entitle us to Happiness; and, as I conceive, there is nothing in the Holy Scriptures which expressly decides this Difficulty, as I may possibly shew hereafter; so I shall not presume to search too narrowly into the secret Dispensations of Providence, or to pronounce any Thing dogmatically concerning his Manner of governing the Universe, more than that he cannot make his Creatures miserable without just and adequate Reasons. And therefore, since we find in Fact, that many of them are so in this State, we must account for this this by Mediums agreeable to his indisputed Attributes, or own that we cannot account for it at all, though it is unquestionably just in it self. All Means will probably conduce in the End to impartial and universal Good, and whatever, or how many States soever of Probation we may pass through, yet I hope, that the Mercies of God, and the Merits of Jesus Christ, will at last exceed, and preponderate the Frailties, Mistakes, and temporary Transgressions of weak and mortal Men; all which I shall endeavour, in Time, to shew from Scripture and Reason: The former of which, in my Opinion, is too generally mistaken or perverted, to signify what it does, not intend, by straining some Passages beyond their literal and genuine Signification, and explaining others too literally, and not making due Allowances to the Manner of speaking used amongst the Eastern Nations, which was very often, if not most commonly, in Hyperboles and other Figures and Allegories. But more of this hereafter, when I dare promise to deserve the Pardon of every candid Person, whom I cannot convince.

I am, &c.

S I R,

AS all the Ideas or Images of the Brain must be caus'd originally by Impressions of Objects without us, so we can reason upon no other. A Man born blind can have no Image of Light or Colours; nor one who has been always deaf, of Sounds; whatever Descriptions are given of them. There are many Creatures in the World who want some Organs of Sense which we have, and probably there are others in the Universe which have many that we want, and such Beings, if there be any such, must know many Things of which we have no Conception; and they must judge of other Things, of which we have a more partial Conception, in different Lights from what we are capable of judging. It is not certain that any two Men see Colours in the same Lights; and it is most certain, that the same Men at different Times, according to the good or ill Disposition of their Organs, see them in various ones, and consequently their Ratiocinations upon them will be different; which Experience shews us to be true in distemper'd enthusiastick or melancholy Men.

Our Senses are evidently adapted to take in only finite or limited Beings; nor are we capable of conceiving their Existence, otherwise than than by the Mediums of Extention and Solidity. The Mind finds that it sees, hears, tastes, smells, and feels, which is its Manner of first conceiving Things, or in other Words, is the Modus in which Objects affect it; and it can reason no farther upon them, than according to those Impressions: So that it is conversant only about the Film or Outside of Bodies, and knows nothing of their internal Contexture, or how they perform their Operations, and consequently can affirm or deny nothing about them, but according to the Perceptions it has; and when it goes further, or attempts to go further, it rambles in the Dark, and wades out of its Depth, and must rave about Non Entities, or, which is the same thing to us, about what we do or can know nothing of, or nothing to the Purpose; and yet these Things, or these Nothings, have employ'd the Leisure, Speculations, and Pens of many very learned Men, as if true Wisdom consisted in knowing what we want Faculties to know.

All that we can know of Infinity, Eternity, &c. is, That we can know little or nothing about them. We must understand what we mean by the Terms, or else we could not use them, or must use them impertinently. We perfectly apprehend what we mean by Duration, which is our Conception of the Continuance of Things, and contains in it a terminus a quo to a terminus ad quem, that is, it has certain Boundaries in our Imaginations, and we can multiply this Conception backwards and forwards, without ever being able to come to the End

End of it, and so may be sure that it is without End; and then the Imagination is lost, and can go no further. We know that all extended Bodies are divisible, and can never be divided so often, but they may be divided further; and therefore say justly, they are infinitely divisible; nor can any Body be so large or long as to come to the End of Extension. And therefore we may safely affirm, That Extension or Space (which is our Conception of the Existence and Immensity of Bodies) is infinite; but then we know no other Properties of Infinity or Eternity, but by the Help of these Conceptions, which being limited and finite, cannot measure what is infinite and eternal; that is, we cannot comprehend what is incomprehensible to any Being, which is not infinite and eternal too; and whose Existence is not as unmeasurable by Time and Place as those Images are.

All the Disputes, seeming Contradictions, and Absurdities, which offer themselves when we think or talk of Infinity or Eternity, arise from our applying our Thoughts, which are confined to finite Beings, and our Words, which are coined to convey finite Conception, to Subjects which are infinite, and of which we can have no adequate Ideas that can be express'd by Sounds. Nothing is more true in finite Beings, than that the Whole must consist of all its Parts; but in Infinity, there is no Whole, nor consequently Parts. Where there is no Beginning nor any End, there can be no Middle; and where there is no Whole, there can be no Half. Time or Space is Theory

Theory are not divisible, because nothing but Time or Space can divide them, and then they are not divided ; yet we know that Time or Space, as they have relation to finite Beings, and our Existence or Duration, may be divided, and are so ; and therefore the Riddles made about them are owing to the Narrowness of our Capacities, and to our endeavouring to apply such Conceptions as we have, to Objects of which we can have no Conception, which is, in effect, to attempt to hear Sights and see Sounds.

It is the same Thing to pretend to define Eternity, or comprehend Infinity ; which is to put Limits and Ends to what has no Limits and Ends, and to comprehend what is incomprehensible ; which Conceptions contradict one another, and cannot stand together in a Proposition. It is the same to talk of infinite Number, for all Number must be finite.

How vain therefore is it, to form any Propositions or Reasonings beyond our Images, or to make positive Deductions from Premises wholly negative ? From hence I conceive proceed all the Fairy Disputes about the Modus of God's existing ; what are his Attributes and Manner of acting ; whether Space is a real Being, or only the Order of Things amongst themselves ; whether it is the Sensorium of God, or what is the Meaning of the Word Sensorium : Which Controversies have taken up great Part of the Time of two very learned Men, that has been spent, as I think, mostly in shewing that they know nothing of the Matter ; or next to nothing. I am sure I have learn'd nothing thing from their Elucidations; whatever others may have done.

All that God Almighty has thought fit to tell us about the Modus of his Existence is, I am that I am. And this we should have known if he had not told it to us; and I believe it is all we ever shall know, till he gives us other Faculties. We are very sure that God is; that some Being must have existed before any Limitation of Time; and independent of every other Being; and consequently must have existed necessarily, or what we call eternally. It is exceeding probable, and, I think, certain, that there cannot be two or more such Beings as are necessary and self-existing; and if but one, then that must be the Cause of all the rest, or, which is the same thing, must produce all the rest; which mediately or immediately must derive their Existence, Faculties, Sensations, Capacities, Powers of Action, and consequently their Actions themselves, from him.

But by what Energy or Power he effects this, we are wholly ignorant; and though the Wits of learned Men have been employ'd in solving this intricate Question for many thousand Years, yet the World is now just as wise as when they first set out; and therefore I humbly think it is high Time to give over, and to content our selves with knowing all that we can know, that is, that we can know nothing about it; and consequently, ought not to form Propositions about God's Essence, his Attributes, concerning his Eternity, his Infinity, the Modus, or what is the Sensorium of his his Existence, or of his Ways or Motives for making or governing the Universe: For I conceive in these Questions we must walk wholly in the Dark; like Travellers who are out of their Way, the further they go, the greater is their Journey home again.

However, I think we are left at liberty to reason about Things which we do know, and therefore may with great Assurance say, That God made all Things, and that every Thing depends immediately, or, by second Causes, mediately upon him; and that it is absolutely impossible they can do otherwise.

I do not see how a greater Absurdity can be put together in Words, than that one Being shall make another, create the Matter of which it was made, give it all the Faculties it has, all its Capacities of Reasoning, Powers of Action, Means of Thinking, and present it with all its Objects for thinking, and yet leave it at liberty to act against them all; which I conceive is a downright Impossibility. A Pair of Scales perfectly pois'd cannot ponderate on either Side; and a Man who has no Motives to act, will not act at all. Every thing must be at rest which has no Force to impell it; but as the least Straw breaks the Horse's Back, or a single Sand will turn the Beam of Scales which holds Weights as heavy as the World; so, without doubt, as minute Causes may determine the Actions of Men, which neither others, nor they themselves are sensible of; but certainly something must determine them, or else they could not be determined; and it is nothing to the purpose to say, that their Choice

Choice determines them, if something else must determine that Choice; for let it be what it will, the Effect must be necessary. To say that a Man has a Power to act without any Motives or Impulse to act, seems to me to be a direct Blunder: A Man can't have a Will, to act against his Will; and if he has a Will to do it, something must determine that Will, and whatever it is, must be his Cause of Action, and will produce the Action; and that can only be the Appearance of Advantage arising from it; and those Appearances must arise from the seeming Relations of Objects to one another, or to himself; which are not in his Disposal, nor consequently are his Actions in the Sense contended for.

If a Man can do a voluntary Action without a Design to do it, and without any Reason or Motive for doing it, then Matter without Understanding has a self-moving Power; which is Atheism with a Witness, tho' I will not, according to laudable Custom, call the Assertors of it Atheists, because they may not see the Consequence; for take away Understanding, and there can be nothing left but Matter: And Understanding is certainly taken away, when a Being has no Reason for acting; but when he has a Reason, that Reason is the Cause, or Co-cause of the Action.

The Question therefore is not whether a Man can do what he has a Mind to do, but, Whether he can do what he has no Mind to do? That is, if his Inclinations concur with his Reasonings, his appearing Interests, and his predominant Passions, whether altogether will will not form his Resolutions, and make him act pursuant to them, whilst those Motives continue. One may as well say a Man can avoid seeing, when an Object strikes the Eye, or Hearing, when it hits the Ear, as to believe that he can decline thinking, when the Motion caused by the Object reaches the Brain, or wherever else the Seat of Thinking is, unless some other more powerful Object obstructs or diverts it in its Journey, or afterwards; and when he does think, he must think as he can, that is, according as Objects from without are represented by their Images to him within, or, in other Words, as they act upon the animal Spirits, or whatever else it is which sets the Machine in Motion. A Man cannot avoid feeling Pain or Sickness, which are Sensations of the Mind, nor chuse whether he will feel them or not; nor can he avoid desiring to get rid of them, unless some stronger Motives determine him, which promise him greater Advantages than he suffers Inconveniencies.

But here the Metaphysical Gentlemen distinguish between the Motions of the Body and those of the Mind: They own the Pulse will beat, the Nerves, Arteries, Muscles, and Blood, will move whether we will or not: And is it not as evident, that, according as they move or beat, the Mind receives Alteration, is enlarg'd or lessen'd, improv'd or impair'd, and determin'd in many of its Resolutions. A Man sick, or in Pain, will send for or go to a Physician or Surgeon, which draws after it a Train of other Resolutions or Actions; and, according to the Success he meets meets with, may alter the whole Scheme of his Life, and of his After-thinking, and very often of his Capacity of Thinking. As our Bodies are healthy or disorder'd, we are courageous, jealous, fearful, enthusiastick, or melancholy, and reason differently, and act differently : And is it not then choice Philosophy, to say, that the Contexture and Disposition of our Bodies (which were not of our own making) often direct or influence the Resolutions of our Minds, and yet are not the Causes of those Resolutions; and to go on to suppose, that our Minds act independently of them, as well as of all other Causes : For 'tis ridiculous to say, that, tho' the Mind has a Principle of Self-Motion, yet, other Causes co-operate to produce the Action; for if any other Cause makes it do what it would not otherwise do, that is the Cause or Co-cause of the Action produc'd to all the Purposes of this Argument; nor can I guess at any one Argument which can be made use of, to shew, that second Causes can produce Part of the Action, or co-operate in producing it, which can prove them incapable to produce the Whole. The most that can be pretended is, that there is a Possibility that it may be so; but I conceive no Reason can be assign'd why it may not be otherwise; but whether it is so or not, I think I have shewn, that the Mind of Man can be only a secondary Cause, must be acted upon by other Causes, and that God alone is the first Cause or Principle of all Motion; and that the Actions of all other Beings are necessarily dependent upon him.

A very great and justly celebrated Author, who supposes that a Man has a self-moving Power; and, I think, only supposes it, endeavours to determine the Question, by reducing his Opponents to account for what no Man yet has accounted for, and yet every Man sees to be true: He says, * If the Reasons and Motives, upon which a Man acts, be the immediate and efficient Cause of the Action, then either abstract Notions (as all Reasons and Motives are) are in themselves Substances, or else that which has no real Subsistence can put a Body in Motion.

Now the Force of this Reasoning consists in putting his Adversary upon shewing how the Mind acts upon the Body, or the Body upon the Mind; and he would have done kindly to have let us into that Secret himself. When he is so obliging to inform the World how the Eye sees, the Ear hears, or the Palate tastes, I dare undertake to solve any other Difficulty he proposes. We find by Experience, when an Object strikes the Eye, it causes that Sensation which we call Seeing; and a Man cannot avoid seeing, no more than in other Circumstances he can avoid feeling Pain and Sickness, which are undoubtedly Actions of the Mind; or if he chuses another manner of Expression, we will call them Passions, (and indeed they are both, viz. the latter as they are impell'd by other Causes, and the former as they produce future Events; and it seems very trifling to me, in so great a Man, to spend so many Pages about the Propriety of a Word, when the Meaning intended to be conveyed by it was fully understood:) but certainly they are Species of Thinking, or, if he pleases, abstract Notions, which often put a Body in Motion, as all Thinking undoubtedly does: But how these Effects are produced we are wholly in the dark.

We see and feel, that Desires and Fears, that abstract Notions or Images of the Brain, alter the Disposition of the whole Fabrick, and often destroy the Contexture of it. We see that the Longings of Women with Child, will stamp Impressions upon the Fetus, which Longings are certainly abstract Notions; and if these are not corporeal, then we must confess, that what is not so, will affect what is: For as to his Words Substance and Subsistence, I shall not pretend to understand them without a farther Explanation, if he means any thing by them besides Body. Methinks this truly worthy and learned Author should not call upon another, to solve what no Man is more capable of solving than himself. I freely own my Ignorance; and since, as I conceive, Revelation is silent in the Matter, am contented to continue in that Ignorance.

His other Argument is as follows: If insensible Matter, or any other Being or Substance continually acting upon a Man, be the immediate and efficient Cause of his Actions, then the Motion of that subtle Matter or Substance must be caused by some other Substance, I would chuse to call it some other Being, and the Motion of that by some other, till at last we arrive at a free Being. Now if instead of the Words free Being, he had said a self-existent Being, which I call God, his Conclusion had been inevitable; nor do I oppose it in the Words he uses: But as we may possibly differ, and I doubt shall do, in the Meaning of the Words free Being, so I neither assent to, nor dissent from his Proposition. I mean, by a free Being, one who has nothing, without itself, to determine or controul its Actions; which God has not, and I think Man has. His Conclusions, therefore from such Premises are nothing to me.

S I R,

IT is justly observ'd by Mr. Locke, and by Mr. Hobbs, and others before him, that we have no innate Ideas, nor can reflect upon them before we have them, that is, we cannot think before we have something to think upon. All Objects and Materials for thinking must be let in upon the Mind thro' the Organs of Sense; and when they are there, we reflect or reason upon them; or, to speak philosophically, when the Action of exterior Bodies strike upon us, they must cause a second Action or Motion, and continue it in infinitum, unless it meets Obstruction. This first Action

on causes Sensation, and the second Reflection; and the first seems to me as necessarily to produce the latter, as the Wind sails a Ship, or the winding up of a Clock sets it in Motion.

Every System of Matter has peculiar Organizations, and can perform only peculiar Functions. A Cow cannot perform the Offices of a Horse, nor a Man of a Monkey; nor indeed, in many Instances, can one Man perform those of another. As some Machines or Systems of Matter consist of vastly finer and more numerous Parts than others, so they are capable of more Operations. A Watch which points to Minutes or Seconds has more Wheels, than one which only shews Hours; and a striking or repeating Watch has more than both, though all are wound up by the same Key. Animals who consist of infinite Tubes, Veins, Arteries, Muscles, and Juices, which also consist of infinite globular, and other figur'd Particles of Matter, must have suitable and very surprizing Operations, though all their Actions must be confin'd within the Circle of their Machine; but they will be multiply'd in equal or greater Degree than the Chances upon Dies: Two Dies have six times as many Chances as one, and three as two, and so on in infinitum; and therefore there seems to be no Difficulty in accounting for the great Variety of Actions in Animals more than in inferior Machines; And as Mankind never have, nor, I presume, ever will discover all the Powers of mechanical Experiments, so with greater Reason one may venture to assert, that no Animal ever yet has exerted all the Faculties it was endu'd with: A thousand Dies may turn up all Sexes; but I believe this has never happen'd, nor I believe ever will.

Vegetables seem to me to be Analogous in many Respects to Animals: Their Generation appears to be much alike: They both rise from Seeds, or Eggs, and continue their Kinds by the same: Their Life is continu'd alike, and their Nourishment convey'd through Veins, or other Tubes; and when that Nourishment ceases, they die; and as the Action of the Sun, or other Bodies, sets the former in Motion, and causes that sort of Sensation which we call Vegetation, so the same Power, or some other like it, seems to rouse animal Life, and sets it in like Motion; and all Motion must be progressive in the same System till it is destroy'd, or that System becomes another, or part of another; which shall be more fully shewn hereafter.

This Action is call'd by different Names, as it affects the different Parts of the Machine. When it affects the Eye, it is call'd Seeing; the Ear, Hearing; the Palate, Tasting; the Nose Smelling; which indeed are but different Sorts of Feeling: But when the Motion is continued farther, and gets to the Brain, or other internal Parts of the System, it causes that Effect which we call Thinking; which again operates within the Animal, and drives it to farther Action, which is always analogous to the Disposition of the Fabrick, and regular, or irregular, according to the present Formation of the Machine, and of the Powers which impel it. And here we cannot enough admire the exquisite Skill of the supreme Architect, who has form'd such stupendious and amazing Works of his Omnipotence; and in many Instances, I conceive we should judge right if we only admir'd them, and not vainly attempted to find out what we can never know. We want Faculties to search the Causes of most Things in Nature, and know nothing of their internal Contexture, and but little of the Modus of their Operations. We see only some sensible Effects of the Actions of Bodies upon one another; but how they produce these Effects, we are utterly ignorant, and I believe ever shall be whilst we are in this State: We cannot tell why the Fire burns, the Grass grows, the Eye sees, the Ear hears, or the Mind thinks; only we find in fact, that they do so; and here is our ne plus ultra.

It is exceedingly imprudent therefore for Men to pretend to determine the Powers of Matter and Motion, when they know not what Matter is, of what Parts it consists, or indeed any thing about it, but by a few outward Effects; nor can we form any Notions of it but from those Effects, which yet probably do not exhaust the Millionth Part of its Powers: And it is still more ridiculous to use the Word Spirit, (of which we have no sort of Idea,) to account for other Things of which we have very little or no Idea neither, and in many Instances, deny what we see, to pretend to believe what we do not understand. Words are only the Signs of Images, as Figures are of Numbers; and what Use is there of a Sound, or Scrall, which signifies nothing, or, which is the same Thing, which stands for what we know nothing of.

Now if a Man should ask a modern Philosopher, what he meant by the Word Spirit? he possibly will answer, that it is something which wants Extension and Solidity. If it be ask'd again, what Conception he has of any Thing which has neither Extension or Solidity? and he answers, that he has none at all, but that there may be Beings in Nature of which he neither has, nor can have any Idea: If then he be ask'd, why he uses a Word which has no Conception annex'd to it, to explain another Thing of which he is wholly in the dark? his Reply, I presume will be, that he cannot account for some Operations of that Being by the Images he had before conceiv'd of it, and the Definitions about it which he had been us'd to; and therefore he was forc'd to recur to negative Ideas. If he be ask'd again, how he knows that his Definitions are right, and take in all the Powers of that Being? he must acknowledge, that he knows not the Thousandth Part of its Powers; but yet perhaps will say, that he is very sure that it has not Powers inconsistent with the Nature of Body. It will be ask'd of him, how he, who knows little or nothing of the Nature of Body, can know what is against the Nature of Body? which Difficulty I shall leave to wiser Men to unriddle.

Now it appears to me, that there are many mechanical Operations of the Minds and Bodies of Animals, which result only from their peculiar Systems of Matter; or, in other Words, compounded Bodies peculiarly systematiz'd, attain new Qualities and Powers which they had not before, and which influence their own Actions, and the Actions of other Bodies, as necessarily as the Loadstone draws Iron, or the Root and Fibres of a Tree or Plant attract the Juices of the Earth, and convey them on till they are transmuted into Wood, Leaves, and Fruit. A Chick, or a young Pheasant, hatch'd in an Oven, as soon as it is out of the Shell; will eat Bread, or Emmet Eggs, and soon after shew Signs of Love or Fear, and shrink from Danger (like the sensitive Plant from the Touch) before it has gain'd any Experience, has any Sense of Injuries, or can know how it can be hurt. Birds hatch'd in a Cage will not only generate together, but will build their Nests in the same Manner, and of the same Materials with those of the same Kind, if they can come at them, without having seen any of the same Sort before. Infant Animals immediately seek the Teats of their Dams, without being taught to do so; and all Animals and Vegetables seek or attract the peculiar Nourishment that is proper to their Species, without any Direction but from Nature, and have the same Affections and Passions, with but little Variation; which I think plainly shews, that their particular Organizations, or Systems of Matter, by a natural Sort of Gravitation or Attraction direct their Operations; and though every Particular of the same Species differs in some Respects from another, and consequently their Actions will vary, yet they are all confin'd within the Limits prescrib'd to the whole Species. And this Observation runs through all Nature.

Now I conceive this must be accounted for as above, or we must recurr to constant Miracle, or else suppose that God Almighty has given to every Species of Animals peculiar Minds different from all other Kinds, and to every Particular a Mind different from all the rest of the same Kind ; which guides and directs all its Actions, and makes all the specific as well as identical Differences we see : For which Supposition I can find no Foundation in Reason, or from Observation ; nor can I perceive what Use can be made of such a Concession ; for whether the Action of Animals are directed by the Disposition of the Materials which form them, or they were originally constituted with such Appetites, they must act the same Way ; and this farther raises our Admiration of the Power and Providence of God, who has form'd all his Creatures in such a Manner as to answer his Intentions in creating them ; and has so dispos'd the Mechanism and Juices of every living Species, as well as of every individual, as will best conduce to its Preservation, and to perform the Function intended.

But here a notable Distinction arises between the Operations of the Mind, and those in the Body, or in other Words, between Sensations and Reflections, between Appetites and Reasonings ; which I must beg leave to think in this Regard, has no Foundation in Nature, and only exists in metaphysical Brains. There can be no Sensations, Inclinations, or Appetites, without the Co-operation of that Faculty, Capacity, Energy, or whatever else it is that we call the Mind. Dead Men can no more hear, see, feel, &c. than a lump of Earth, because their Organization is destroy'd, or the animal Spirits which set them in Motion can no longer continue that Motion, or the separate Principle, call'd the Mind, can no longer keep its Habitation; but whatever it be, or by what Name soever call'd, it is certainly the causa sine qua non of the Actions of the Animal, and is one Link of the Chain of Causes which direct and govern his voluntary Motions.

in

'Tis the Mind which sees, hears, tastes, smells, feels, desires, or fears; and herein consists the Difference between Animals and Vegetables: They have both Life, and both have Organizations proper to preserve and continue that Life by suitable Nourishment convey'd through Veins and Tubes: Both have surprizing Operations, and unsearchable by our Capacities; and both must have a long Train of Causes from Nature to enable them to produce those Operations: but besides many other possible Causes link'd together in those Chains, and many of them existing within Animals themselves which we do not know, there is one which we do, namely, the Will or Desire to do a Thing; and this certainly, in a thousand Instances, depends upon Causes without us, and which are undoubtedly out of our Power; which Causes without, set the other

other Causes within us at work, and produce the Will, and consequently the Action.

A Chick, or young Pheasant, would no more peck, or a Lamb suck, than if it was dead, if it did not intend to do it : It feels Uneasiness by Hunger, and strives to help itself : It certainly shews Thought and Choice, in preferring one Sort of Food before another, and in shrinking or running away from Danger : And these are all Actions of the Mind. It is true, as it grows older, and its Contexture stronger, its Experience encreases, and its Capacity grows with it ; but the Faculty is the same, and for any thing which appears to the contrary, results from the Formation of the System ; nor can I conceive how all Birds, Beasts, and Fishes of the same Species, should have the same, or very near the same Sensations, Desires, and Fears, and chuse the same Kinds of Food and Means of Preservation, and always use the same, or very near the same Address, Cunning, or Artifice, unless their Contexture, the Disposition of Materials and Juices, of which they are compos'd, by a natural Mechanism, produc'd these Effects, either by constituting or acting upon that Energy, call'd their Minds, and then directing and coercing those Minds to exert the Faculty, call'd the Will, which produces the Action, if it may be lawful to distinguish an Operation of the same Power from its self.

I am not aware of any other Objection to this Reasoning, but that we can have no Conception how Matter can produce an Act or Operation of the Mind in Brute Animals, and therefore therefore other Systems have been invented, equally unconceivable, to avoid this, and which apparently contradict Fact. It is plain, that their Minds are affected, altered, and receive Addition and Diminution by Diet, Physick, and Exercise, and partake, in many Respects, of the Fate of their material System; and their Faculties are greater or less, according to the Disposition of that System, as shall be more fully shewn in future Papers. And since the whole must consist of the several Parts, what Reasons can be assign'd to prove, that material Causes may create or produce the Parts and not the Whole, I mean of their Minds; for as to the Soul of Man, I shall consider it separately hereafter. For my own Part, I have had always so unfortunate a Turn of Thinking, that I could never subscribe to Opinions, because others held them before me; nor will I send into the Clouds for Solutions which lie under my Nose, or refuse the Benefit of my Eyes to amuse my Understanding, neither shall I regard the Calumnies and uncharitable Censures of those who dare not peep out of their dark Dungeons, and would measure all Truth by imbib'd Prejudices, but shall ever think, that I shall do more Honour to Almighty God in believing that he has so form'd at once the whole Fabrick of Heaven and Earth, as to produce all the Events he intended, than to suppose he has often found Cause to mend and alter his first Resolutions; tho' I confess it may consist with his Wisdom, and conduce to the Ends of his Providence, to suffer Matters,

ters, in some Respects, and at some Times, to appear to us in other Lights. -

He certainly is a more skillful Artificer who can make a Watch which shall go for a thousand Years, and then break to Pieces at a stated Time, than another who makes one which must be wound up every Day, and mended every Month.

S I R,

THE World has always run riot after one Whimsy or another: Astrology was the Madness of the last Age; and pretended Prophets, Fortune-tellers, Conjurers, Witches, Apparitions, and such like superstitious Fooleries, have been in request in all Ages: Dreamers of Dreams, led, misled, and governed Mankind for more than two Thousand Years together, and they are far from being out of Fashion yet: And it is no small Comfort, that this Sort of Divination and Instruction is left to us; for I do not find that any Society of Men pretend to have any Jurisdiction over sleeping Dreams, or to have the sole Conduct, Regulation, or Interpretations of them, but every Man when he is asleep, is left at liberty to dream as he can, and interpret his Dreams as he thinks fit; which Indulgence is not allow'd to our waking Dreams. I shall therefore fore take the Advantage of this present Toleration of dreaming, to dream too; and though I will not vouch and be answerable for the Truth of my Dreams, yet I dare compare them with those of the ancient and some modern Philosophers.

I conceive, that the Divines of all Religions have ever agreed, That the Soul of Man is a Being separate from the Body, and in its own Nature capable of subsisting independent of it, and I also conceive, that all Christian Divines hold, or ought to hold, that it is a distinct Being from what we call the Mind, and superadded to it by the divine Goodness to distinguish Mankind from the Brute Creation, to continue his Being after the Dissolution of the Body, and to make him an Object of future Rewards and Punishments; for 'tis certain, that other Animals have Minds too, and reason and resolve, though in an inferior Degree to our selves; and I think also, that it is almost universally agreed, that those Minds rake the Fate of their Bodies, and die with them.

The Philosophers of all Ages have set themselves to work, and employ'd their Wits to trace the Minds of Brutes to their first Sources or Principles, and so to account for their Operations, but have differed as widely as they do in other Matters, about which they know nothing: Some have supposed them to be Modifications of Matter and Motion, and Operations resulting from the Organization and Mechanism of the Body, like the striking of a Clock, or Watch, or Musick made by blowing blowing into or striking upon an Instrument; for as the Percussion of one Body against another makes Sound, so the Instruments or Vehicles upon which or through which, it hits or passes, modify and determine the Species of it.

These endeavour to illustrate the Power of Voluntary Motion (viz. how a sudden Impulse of the Will can set a great Machine in Action) by what they think is analogous to it in mechanical Observations; as for Instance, a little Agitation of the Air will turn a Windmill, or sail a great Ship; and 'tis demonstrable in Mechanicks, that a Hair of a Man's Head, or a Puff of his Breath, by the Help of proper Springs, Wheels, and Pullies, may have Force enough to move a Body as big and as heavy as the World; and then they reason, that if the little Contrivance and trifling Experiment, we can make of the Powers of Matter and Motion, can convince us of its Capacity to produce such surprising Effects and Operations, a Machine organized by the excellent Skill, and most wise Contrivance, of the supreme Architect, and consisting of such subtle animal Spirits, and of such Infinite Springs, Wheels, and Tubes, must have suitable Operations, and some of them such as are not perceivable by our Senses, or penetrable by our Capacities: They conceive there is something in Vegetation analogous to animal Life, and that the Difference of the appearing Sensations between the highest Vegetable and the lowest Animal (as for Example, between the sensitive Plant and a Worm or Snail), Snail) is so very little that they can account for them both by the same System of Reasoning, or rather, they are both equally unaccountable by our Reason: And therefore, since the former is undoubtedly only a Modus or Operation of Matter and Motion, they think we cannot know but the other may be so too.

Many Pretenders to Philosophy have thought the Mind of a Brute Animal to be Part of the Body, originally formed with it, and differing only from the other Parts, as it has a finer Contexture, and consists of more subtle and volatile Particles of Matter; that cannot keep together without their Case or Shell, and consequently cannot exist together in a separate State from the Body, but when the Organization and Mechanism of its Inclosure is dissolved or broke to Pieces, it must dissipate into the Mass of Matter again.

But the greater Number have thought, that there is an anima Mundi, or Universal Spirit, that permeates and actuates all Matter, and is the Source of vegetable and animal Life, which receiving its Modification from, and assimilating it self to the Nature and Structure of the Body through which it passes, or in which it acts, constitutes all the specifick Effects and Operations which we daily see, feel, and admire; as in the Instances before given, the same Wind, blown into different Instruments, makes different Kinds of Musick.

Many of this latter Sort have fancied, that all Nature is full of organized Bodies, with each a particular and sufficient Portion of this universal and vital Spirit annex'd to or inher-

rent in them, which Bodies being in constant Motion fall gradually into peculiar Matrixes or Wombs, which are necessary to bring them to Perfection. They think the first Seeds of all Vegetables and Animals (which are indeed the Vegetables and Animals themselves) must have been formed at the Creation of the World; that the Seeds of the former must make their Progression thro' the Veins and Tubes of Vegetables of the same Kind, to prepare them to become Fruit, and to produce that grosser sort of Seed which more easily, and by another Motion, grows into the same kind of Plant or Tree again; and those of the latter must pass through the Body of the Male to awaken their first Life, who are sent to nurse into the Eggs, of the Female for Encrease and Expansion; and they conceive, that Experience confirms this Opinion, for that an Egg will not produce an Animal till the Male has thrown one into it; but afterwards, by the Assistance of that vital Warmth which it receives from a living Body, (or that Heat which is equivalent to it, and is necessary to preserve the tender Fibres and Juices of Infant Animals) it continues Life, nourishes and encreases it, till it swells and breaks out of its first Enclosure, and is strong enough to receive grosser Nourishment.

It seems to me, that the Generation or Production of Vegetables is analogous to, if not the same with that of Animals, and that they both receive their first Nourishment and Encrease in Eggs; and what are vulgarly called the Seeds of the former, are Eggs, that enclose the minute Specks of Entiry, which are its original Seeds or Principals, or rather the whole Plants or Trees in Mignature, nourish them for some Time, and defend them against the Injuries of exterior Bodies, when they first expand themselves, and swell out of their native Beds, and their tender Parts become susceptible of outward Violence. It is evident, that if we break up new or Maiden-Ground many Sorts of Vegetables will spontaneously arise, which have undoubtedly their proper Seeds in the Earth, and as undoubtedly none of those gross Seeds which produce the same Plant again; and it is plain, that the latter are subject to be destroy'd by exterior Accidents, and to decay and die, which the others are not, but very probably have had an unmolested Existence from the Beginning of Time, and would have continu'd in their first State, if they had not received a Fermentation, and found a proper Matrix, by the opening the Fibres and Bowels of the Earth, and which must be a different Matrix from what multiplies the same Species afterwards.

There have been other Sects of Philosophers (if Folly may be call'd by that Name) who have distinguish'd themselves by supposing the Mind and Soul to be the same Being, and consequently enjoy'd in common by other Animals, as well as Men; and they have suppos'd this Being not only to be different too from the Body, and capable in its own Nature, not only of subsisting independent of it, but believ'd that it receiv'd Prejudice, and was restrain'd from the free Use of many of its Faculties

by its Imprisonment and Union with it; and yet, when it was discharg'd from its Goal, was at Liberty, capable of oblig'd to enter into some other organiz'd Body, and animate it, and perform the Functions of it. This was the Opinion of the Transmigrators of Souls formerly, but justly is rejected by very many Christians; is contrary to Revelation, and would put Brute Animals upon a level with Mankind; for it cannot be deny'd that other living Creatures have Minds, and as certainly no Souls; nor are they capable of just or unjust Actions, or of receiving future Rewards and Punishments due to those Actions.

It is certain they have Minds, and consequently Thought, Reflection upon past Actions, or Memory; Sensations of Pleasure and Pain; and in many Instances they judge well of their own Interests, and chuse proper Means to attain them; and Mankind have not only the above Qualities in common with them, but possess them in a greater Degree, and over and above enjoy, by the Bounty of Heaven, immortal Souls, capable of continuing their Duration to all Eternity; of which some Traces are discoverable in our Nature, and the rest are ascertain'd to us by Revelation, which Man alone is capable of receiving: But how this superadded Being operates upon, and controlls the Actions of the Mind and Body, we seem to be wholly in the Dark; but 'tis certain in some Respects they are all blended together, co-operate, and act as one Being, and therefore are answerable for their joint Actions, and are to take the same Fate at last, when they come to be united again. However, in this Discourse it may be proper to consider them them separately, and not to impute the mechanical Operations of Matter and Motion immediately to our immortal Part; especially in such Instances as are the same, or analogous to the Actions of Brutes, who are wholly mortal.

Therefore, if we consider this Energy, or Principle, called a Mind, as separate from an human Soul; we shall find that it mingles with, animates, and informs the Bodies of Men, and of all Animals; and whether it is only a Modification of Matter and Motion; whether subtle, volatile, and elastick Particles of Matter, called Animal Spirits; if elementary Fire, or what the Ancients call'd Anima Mundi; or Divine Particular Aura, that is, a Particle of the Soul of the Universe, or a Spark or Impulse of the Divinity, or whatever else it is, unknown to us, it is most certain, that its Power and Action over some Sorts of organiz'd Bodies is very surprizing, and not to be accounted for by any other System of Matter and Motion which falls within our Comprehensions; nor can I conceive it possible that it ever should be: For how should any Being trace its own Principles, and the Causes, which gave it Being, know what it was before it was, or be able to think how it came to think; unless by resolving all Thinking into the Power of its Creator. To know the Modus of Creation, is the next Step to Creation, and to a Creature's creating itself, or another Being like itself, and rendering the Opus Operatum, or the Work perform'd, equally, or near as valuable as the Artificer.

The Powers of this Principle are very stupendious. We seem to owe most, if not all our Sensations, Appetites, Affections, and Passions

ons to it, which obviously receive constant Alteration by the Addition of new and adventitious Particles of Matter, which must more or less be penetrated and inspir'd with this Spirit, which unites to what is call'd the Mind, as the grosser Parts do to the Body; for neither can grow but by Addition, or be less'n'd, but by Subtraction, tho' their Actions may be, and are often clogg'd by internal and external Impediments: Our Desires and Fears, which appear to direct, and indeed comprehend all the Actions of the Mind, are only Passions, or Perturbations of it, made by the Impressions of external or internal Causes; and what we call Judgment seems to me to be no more than a Struggle of those Passions, or, in other Words, the Ballance of the Conveniences or Inconveniences which will result from what we desire or fear, and the heavier Scale must weigh down.

When a proper Proportion of this active Force is duly diffus'd through the whole Machine, it will equally receive or resist the Impressions of Objects; the Passions will be alike ballanc'd, and consequently our Thoughts and Actions will be regular, and what we call prudent: But if there is too little to animate the Mass, or if it meets such Obstructions as hinders its Energy, it becomes Stupidity or Folly; but if it abounds, and over-informs its Tenement, or if it is unequally dispers'd, or is put or kept out of its proper Place by natural or accidental Obstructions, it causes Indiscretion, Extravagance, and, in a greater Degree, Madness; of which several Manners of of Thinking, there are as many Kinds and Degrees as there are Irregularities in Man's Conduct ; and I doubt there are few Men so equally temper'd, but they have, at different Times, more or less of all these Qualities by the unequal Supplies of this vital Spirit, or the occasional Obstructions it meets with. When we denominate a Man mad, or a Fool, we mean only, that he is more so than most others of his Species ; for all Men at Times have a Mixture of both ; and no Man's Actions will always bear the Test of just Reasonings ; and if we could enter, and look into their private Thoughts, I doubt they would much less do so. All sudden Passions is temporary Madness, as continued Passion is continued Madness, and all Want of Apprehension is Folly.

Madness too is undoubtedly to be learn'd and acquir'd by Habit and Exercise, as well as Covetousness, Pride, Ambition, Love, Desire of Revenge, and other Qualities : All which, carried beyond a certain Degree, become Madness, as every thing else is, when Mens Desires or Fears, or the Means chosen to attain the one, or avoid the other, are extravagant, and above human Power or Prudence : Nor does Madness (as has been said) depend only upon wrong Organizations at first, or upon the original ill Temperament of the Juices by an undue Mixture or Superabundance of this active Spirit, but often upon the fortuitous Alterations which both receive afterwards by Diet, Physick, Action, or Accidents ; for when those volatile Particles have been long diverted, and used to run in

wrong and indirect Channels, proper ones will be closed up, and they will have no others to go in, which must over-load some, and starve the rest, and make their Operations as heterogenous and irregular as their Causes are; and daily Experience shews, that Men who have been long us'd to think, or act only in one Way, are very difficultly, if ever, put into another.

But of all the several Species or Kinds of Madness in the World, none is so flagrant, catching, and mischievous as the Madness of Enthusiasm, which is still the worse, as it adopts and puts on the Mask and Appearance of Zeal, and often passes for Sobriety and Inspiration, and consequently is incapable of a Cure, because it will not seek or accept a Remedy. This shall be the Subject of my two next Papers; and then my Dream will be out.

I am, &c.

S I R,

I H A V E suppos'd, in my last, that our Desires and Fears are Passions or Impressions made upon us by the Actions of other Beings, and that a due Ballance of those Passions, or equal Impressions, made upon the several Parts of the Machine, duly impregnated with vital Spirit, makes it act regularly, and consti-constitutes what we call Prudence ; but when it is over-inform'd, or irregularly inform'd, or those Impressions are too strong for the Machine to grapple with, it becomes Madness and Distraction ; for the Truth of which, we need only appeal to Experience. Men of warm Constitutions are easily animated into Madness by fiery Liquors, and high Food, or by occasional Strokes of good or bad Fortune ; whereas those, who have not a sufficient Share of vital Spirit, are only elevated and rais'd to a proper Pitch by the former, or wholly depress'd by the latter, as wanting Vigour to resist their Power, whilst Nature, in the others, by an unequal Struggle and Contention with it, over-exerts itself, and disorders and shakes the whole Machine.

This Hypothesis receives farther Confirmation from the Methods usually taken to cure Madness ; namely, by Fasting, Bleeding, or Purging, which can operate only by removing, carrying off, or suffering to exhale or perspire the superabundant Particles of spirituous Matter, which over-charge and disorder the Fabrick, till it receives a fresh Fermentation from the Addition of new Ones ; when the Distemper again returns. Since therefore it is evident, that some of our thinking Faculties receive Addition and Diminution from the Action of other Bodies, and from many internal and external Causes, it must be equally evident that they must be mortal, or perishable in their own Nature ; for what is Mortality but a Being changing its Form, Shape, or State ; and what is Immortality, but its continuing always the same; and every Alteration makes it a different Being in some Respects from what it was before.

It seems therefore plain to me, that all of the Operations of our Minds do not flow from our immortal Souls; but many of them have much lower Sources: For what can be more absurd, than to suppose that what is immortal, and consequently not perishable, can be bled, purged, or starved away in whole or in part; or that a Being independent of Matter, that pervades and permeets all Matter, and yet (as it is said) has no Extension, nor takes up or fills any Place, can be acted upon by Matter, which we cannot conceive to act otherwise than by Contract or Impulse, and consequently cannot affect what it cannot touch mediately or immediately; that is to say, either by instant Action, upon an adjoining Body, or by striking or gravitating upon distant Ones, by the Communication of most or all which are intermediate. I do not pretend to describe the Modus of Gravitation, or to define how material Substances attract one another, whether by Lucretius's System of hook'd Atoms, or by an elastick Principle that God has given to every Particle of Matter, which keeps it in constant Motion, and impelling all contiguous Parts; which Motion must force the more dense Bodies together, the more subtle and thin Ones not being able to resist their Power, and interrupt their Union.

It is highly probable, if not certain, that every Part of Matter is affected more or less by all Parts of Matter; and therefore greater ter the Quantity is that is united together, the more it must impel some Bodies, and resist others; and when any Part of Matter are kept from having their full Influence and Operation upon a dense and aggregate Substance by the Interposition of another, acted upon by the Motion of Bodies encompassing it; then it seems evident, that those two Substances must meet together, unless some other Power hinders their Junction; for all circumambient Bodies having their full Force upon them, except in those Parts which look towards one another; and they still preserving their own Force and intrinsic Motion, they must necessarily gravitate, and more where they meet with the least Opposition. But whether this is the true Cause of Gravitation, or whether we shall ever know the Cause of it whilst we are in these frail Bodies; yet I conceive we are under no Necessity to recur immediately to the first Cause, when we cannot dive into his Manner of governing the Universe; nor, since we want Faculties to conceive how he has united the Soul to the Body, are we to determine it to be done in a Manner which apparently contradicts the Nature of both; but we ought to leave and submit those Searches to the secret Decrees of Providence, and to the Time of the last Resurrection, when our Minds and Bodies will be as immortal as our Souls, and when possibly all these Matters may be reveal'd to us.

I think therefore it is pretty evident, by what I have said in this Paper and the last, as well as from constant Observation, that Mad-riels is a Super-abundance of vital Spirits; which must burst their Vessel, if they do not overflow, or are let out by Tapping; but which Way soever they find their Evacuation, they generally ferment first, and make a terrible Combustion within. This is the Devil which haunts us, and often carries away Part of an empty House, or blows it up. If he ascends to our Garrets, or upper Regions, he disorders the Brain; and shews Visions, airy and romantic Images and Appearances, carries the Hero out of himself, and then sends him armed Cap-a-Pee in wild Expeditions to encounter Windmills, and Giants of his own making; till at last he returns Home (if ever he returns Home) transported with his Victory, and in his own Opinion a most consummate Knight-Errant.

Whenever the Mind cannot be confined within its Inclosure, but flies like Phaeton into the great Abyss, and gives the full Reins to Imagination, it will quickly be carried out of its Knowledge, and will ramble about wherever Fancy, Desire, or Vision, leads it. It will quickly rise above Humanity, and become proper Conversation for the Celestial Beings; and when once it can persuade itself into such Angelical Company, it will certainly despise all other, and the Owner will think he has a Right to govern them. If the Excess of any Passion is Madness, the Excess of them altogether is exorbitant and outrageous Madness; and whoever can get it into his Head, that he has secret Communidations with the Deity, must have all his Passions at at Work together. The Awe of a divine Presence must strike him strongly with Fear and Reverence : The Indulgence and Condescension shewn to him, must raise the highest Love, Adoration, and Transports of Joy : So visible a Partiality of the Deity to him beyond other Men in a weak Mind, must create Pride, and Contempt towards others : Such a Support and Assistance must inspire the highest Courage and Resolution to overcome all Opposition ; and Hatred, and Revenge, to all who don't believe him, will bring up the Rear ; and at last the Jumble of all these Passions, with many more, will make an accomplish'd Reformer of Mankind.

Religious Enthusiasm therefore is a flaming Conceit, that we have great personal Interest with the Deity, and that the Deity is eminently employed about us, or in us ; that he warms and solaces our Hearts, guides our Understandings and our Steps, determines our Will, and sets us far above those, who have less Pride and more Sense than our selves. The Enthusiast heats his own Head by extravagant Imaginations, and then makes the All-wise Spirit of God, the Author of his hot Head ; and having work'd up his Brains into the Clouds, despises and hates all that are below ; and if he can, kills them, unless they submit to be as Mad as himself ; for, because he takes his own Phrensy for Inspiration, you must be guided by his Phrensy ; and if you are not, you are a Rebel to God, and 'tis ten to one but he has a Oall to put you to Death.

I have but a bad Opinion of that Devotion which is rais'd by a craz'd Head, and can be improved by a Dram, and a hot Sun, or the Assistance of Wine, or can be lessen'd by cold Weather, or by letting of Blood. It is great Madness, mix'd with Presumption, to pretend to have the Spirit of God, unless we can shew it by doing Works, which only God's Spirit can do; that Spirit which can do all Things, but foolish Things. Enthusiasm is doubtless a Fever in the Head; and like other Fevers, spreading and infectious; and all the Zeal of the Enthusiast, is only an Ambition to propagate his Fever.

You never knew a Madman of any Sort, who was not wiser than all Mankind, and did not despise his whole Race, who were not bless'd with the same Obliquity of Head. Those in Bedlam, think they are all mad who are out of it; and the Madmen out of Bedlam, pity the Madmen in it. The Virtuoso, or Dealer in Butterflies, who lays himself out in the Science of blew and brown Beetles, thinks all Science but his own to be useless or trifling. The Collectors of old Books, are of Opinion, that Learning, which is intended to improve and enlighten the Understanding, is inseparable from Dust, and Dirt, and Obscurity, or contemptible without them. The Pedant loads his heavy Head with old Words, and scorns all those who are not accomplish'd with the same Lumber.

Now all these Madmen, and many more, who might be added, are harmless Enthusiasts; and their Pride being part of their Madness, is only a Jest. But your holy Enthusiast, is often a mischievous Madman, who out of pure Zeal for God, destroys his Creatures, and plagues, and harasses, and kills them for their Good. The Saracens, a barbarous, poor, and desert Nation, half-naked, without Arts, unskilled in War, and but half-armed, animated by a mad Prophet, and a new Religion, which made them all mad; over-run and conquer'd almost all Asia, most part of Africa, and a part of Europe. Such Courage, Fierceness, and Mischief, did their Enthusiasm inspire. It is amazing how much they suffer'd, and what great Things they did, without any Capacity of doing them, but a Religion which was strong in Proportion, as it wanted Charity, Probability, and common Sense.

They saw rapturous Visions in the Air, of beautiful Damsels richly attired, holding forth their Arms, and calling to them for their Embraces; and being animated by such powerful Deities, no Enterprize was too hard for them: They scarce ever departed from any Siege, however inferior to it in military Arts or Numbers. Their constant Rule, was to fight till they had subdued their Enemies, either to their Religion, or to pay Tribute. They had God and his great Apostle on their Side, and were obstinately determin'd to die, or to conquer; and therefore they always did conquer. And their Success confirm'd their Delusion; for finding that they performed greater Actions than any other Race of Mankind ever did, or could do, they believed themselves assisted by Heaven; and so esteemed their Madness, to be Inspiration. And then it was very natural to believe that they were the sole Favourites of the Almighty ; who interposed so miraculously in their Behalf, that they were employed to do his Work ; and that all the good Things of this World, were but just Rewards of their Obedience ; and consequently it was their Duty to plunder, distress, kill, and destroy all who resisted the Will of God, and denied to give to them their undoubted Right.

Now what was able to withstand these inspired Savages, who if they lived and conquer'd, had this World, or, which was better if they were killed, had the next. They were sure either of Empire or Paradise, and a Paradise too, which gratified their brutish Appetites. There is no dealing with an armed Enthusiast ; if you oppose real Reason to his wild Revelations, you are curs'd ; and if you resist him, you are kill'd. It signifies nothing to tell him, that you cannot submit to the Impulses of a Spirit, ~~which~~ you have not, and do not believe ; and that when you have the same Spirit, you will be of the same Mind : No, perhaps, that very Spirit has told him that he must kill you for not having it, though you could no more have it, than you could be what you were not.

Don Quixote was a more reasonable Mad-man : He never beat, nor famish'd, nor tortur'd the unbelieving Sancho, for having a cooler Head than his own, and for not seeing the extraordinary Miracles and Visions which he himself saw. If a Man sees Battles in the Air, or Armies rising out of the Sea, am I

to be persecuted or ill used because I cannot see them too, when they are not to be seen ? Or ought not rather their distracted Seer, to be shut up in a dark Room, where no doubt he will have the same Sight, and be equally happy in his own Imaginations. As there is no reasoning with an Enthusiast, there is no Way to be secure against him, but by keeping him from all Power, with which he will be sure to play the Devil in God's Name. I would not hurt him for his Ravings ; but I would keep him from hurting me for not raving too.

All Men who can get it into their own Heads, that they are to subdue others to their Opinions, Reasonings, and Speculations, are Enthusiasts or Impostors, Madmen or Knaves. Almighty God has given no other Light to Men to distinguish Truth from Falshood, or Imposture from Revelation, but their Reason ; and in all the Addresses, he himself makes to them, appeals to that Reason. He has formed us in such a Manner, as to be capable of no other kind of Conviction ; and consequently he can expect no other from us ; therefore, it must be the last Degree of Impudence, Folly, and Madness, in impotent, fallible, and faithless Men, to assume greater Power over one another, than the Almighty exercises over us all.

The appointing Judges in Controversy, is like setting People at Law about what they are both in Possession of. A Man can have no more than all he is contending for ; and therefore I can compare the Quarelling of two Men about.

about their Religion, to nothing else in Nature, but to the Battle between Prince Volsius, and Prince Presbyman, in the Rehearsal; because they were not both in Love with the same Mistress.

I am, &c.

S I R,

BESIDES the flaming Enthusiasm mentioned in our last, which is there suppos'd to be inspired by a Super-abundance of Spirits, labouring for Evacuation; and shaking, disordering, and sometimes bursting its Tenement to get ready Vent, (like Gunpowder in a Granado or Mine; or, subterraneous Fire enclosed in the Bowels of the Earth :) There seems to me to be another sort of religious Enthusiasm, not at all mischievous, but rather beneficent to the World; and this has shewn it self in several Ages, and under several Denominations. There is much to be read of it in the mystlick Writers in all Times. Hermits seem to be inspir'd with it, and several Sects have built their innocent Superstitions upon it; as the Alumbrazi in Spain, the Quietists in Italy, the French Prophets lately amongst us; and I doubt, a very great Party in Europe, call'd Quakers, owe their Rise and Increase to it. And having mention'd this last Sect, I think my self self obliged to declare, that I esteem them to be great, industrious, modest, intelligent, and virtuous People; and to be animated with the most beneficent Principles of any Sect, which ever yet appeared in the World. They have a comprehensive Charity to the whole Race of Mankind, and deny the Mercies of God to none. They publicly own, that an universal Liberty is due to all, are against Impositions of every Kind; and yet patiently submit to many themselves, and perhaps are the only Party amongst Men, whose Practices, as a Body, correspond with their Principles.

I am not ashamed to own, that I have with great Pleasure read over Mr. Barclay's Apology for Quakerism, and do really think it to be the most masterly, charitable, and reasonable System that I have ever seen. It solves the numerous Difficulties raised by other Sects; and by Turns, thrown at one another, shews all Parts of Scripture to be uniform and consistent; and as Sir Isaac Newton, by allowing him Gravitation, has accounted for all the Phenomena of Nature, so if we allow to Mr. Barclay those Operations of the Spirit, which the Quakers pretend to feel, and which he says every Man in the World has and may feel, if he watches its Motions, and does not suppress them: Then I think all the jangling vain Questions, numerous Superstitions, and various Oppressions, which have plagued the World from the Beginning, would cease and be at an End.

But this Postulatum will not be granted, and I fear will never be prov'd, though such a Discovery is much to be wished, and the Opinion of it alone, must render those very happy who can persuade themselves that they have attained to it. Mr. Asgil wrote and publish'd a Book to prove, that all true Believers, (that is all who had attained a Spirit like to this,) shall be translated without passing through Death; and, as I doubt not, but he believed his own Dream himself; so if he had published it before any Man had actually died, I cannot see how it could have been answer'd, or how it can be answered now, but by opposing Fact to it, and by making the Words Eternal Death, signify Eternal Life in Torments, which Liberty no Language will bear in other Disputes; and yet his Doctrine cannot be assented to without supposing, that no Man ever had Faith but Elias and Enoch; which is a very wild Supposition.

For the same Reason, I cannot concur with Mr. Barclay, in believing that all Men who cannot find this Spirit in themselves, do or have suppressed it; for I believe there are many Thousands in all Respects, equally virtuous with himself, who have actually tried all Experiments of Watching, internal Prayer, outward and inward Resignation, Separation from worldly Thoughts and Actions, and Acquiescence of Mind, and Submission to the Operations of the Deity; and yet have found themselves, after all, just where they set out; nor could recollect any Thing that happened to them in those Intervals, but Absence of Thought; and therefore, till I can feel something in my self, or discover some Traces in others, which I cannot account for from lower Motives, I shall take the Liberty to call the Pretenders to it, Enthusiasts, though, I must confess, that all or most religious Parties have laid Claim to this Spirit upon certain Occasions, and have bestowed it upon their Founders, or particular Men amongst them; and the Quakers only say, all Men have it, and may exert it, or rather permit it to exert itself if they please.

It is supposed that the Power so claimed, is Jesus Christ operating within us; and as it is allowed by all that the least Drop of his natural Blood was enough to atone for the Sins of the whole World; so one might imagine that the least Portion of his Godhead, working within us, might be too hard for and overcome the Depravity transmitted to us by our first Parents, or at least be able to engage our Attention or Acquiescence, which is all that is supposed requisite to the farther Progress and Effusion of his Deity. It is very hard to conceive, that we can serve God by sequestering for a Time all the Faculties he has given us; by sending our Wits out of Doors to make Room for Grace, and by believing that the Spirit of God will never exert it self but in an empty Head; and therefore I shall presume to believe, till I am better informed, that as the Almighty shews and exhibites to us the visible World by the Medium of the outward Senses he had before given to us, so he dispenses all that we do know or can know of the invisible One, thro' the Vehicles of our reasoning Faculties.

We

We have not yet been able thoroughly to discover any Vacuum in Nature, but as soon as any Body gets out of a Place, another leaps in; therefore if a Man can once drive his Wits out of House and Home, some other Being of a different Kind will certainly get into their Room, and Wind is always at Hand crowding for Preferment, which, in various Shapes, has a great Share in human Transactions, and always has contributed much to the great Revolutions in Empire and Superstition, which have often overturned the World. But to return to my Dream.

A Clock, or other Machine, made by a skillful Artist, will have certain and regular Motions, whilst it continues in that State; but if it gathers filth, meets with Obstructions, or its Springs and Wheels decay and wear out by Time, or are hurt by Accidents, it moves irregularly, or not at all. Experience proves the same in the Mechanism of Animals, who have infinitely finer Contextures, as consisting of Thousands of Tubes, Veins, Arteries, Nerves, and Muscles, every one of which, in a certain Degree, contributes to the Operations of the living Engine; and as all these are more tender and delicate, and consequently more susceptible of Injuries, than the Parts which constitute and give Motion to other organiz'd Bodies, so they are much more easily put out of Order; and we find in Fact, that a Cold which stops Perspiration, and hinders the Evacuation of the super-abundant Particles of Matter, disorders the whole Fabrick, clogs and interrupts its Action; and those

those Effluvia which cannot find their proper Vent through the Pores, over-shadow and oppress the Brain, and render the Mind unactive, and incapable to perform its Functions, till they are let out by larger Passages, as by bleeding, or vomiting, or forced out by sweating, or other violent Action, or by fasting, and taking in no new Supplies, there is Time given to them leisurely to expire ; but if they require quicker Vent than these Conduits can give, then Fevers, or other violent Distempers ensue, when the Brains of Men are so oppress'd, that they see Visions, Appearances of Angels, Demons, and dead Men, talk incoherently, and sometimes surprizingly, and have obviously different Sensations, Affections, and Reasonings, from what they have at other Times.

The same is true of Madmen, who through wrong Organizations at first, or the Indisposition of the Organs, afterwards persuade themselves that they are Princes, Prophets, or Messengers from Heaven ; and certainly often utter Flights, and Sallies of Imagination, which are amazing, and that never fall from them in their lucid Intervals, and which have often passed upon the World for Inspiration ; insomuch, as in several Ages, and in several Countries in our Age, they have been, and are thought to be divinely inspired. Now Madness shews itself in a thousand Shapes, and as has been said in my former Paper, there is scarce a Man living, but at Times has more or less of it, though we denominate it from a Train of irregular Actions, and many kinds of it certainly do not fall within common Observation, or scarce within any Observation.

When we see Men in the main of their Conduct seemingly act with Prudence in such Things as we understand, we are apt to take their Words in such Things as we do not understand, especially if we see them do such Actions, shew such Emotions of Spirit, and emit such Discourses as we cannot otherwise account for, though we perceive the same done by Men in known Distempers, and in Sleep, and often feel it in our selves: For it is incredible to those who have not seen or observ'd it, what Energy and Strength Men shew in Convulsive Distempers, when too they often vent surprizing Discourses, without knowing what they say; and there are few Men, who do not sometimes strike out sudden and extemporary Thoughts and Expressions, without being able to observe by what Traces they came into their Minds; and fanciful and conceited Men easily persuade themselves, or are persuaded by others, to believe that at those Times they are inspir'd from Above.

But if we compare Things we do not know, with those we do, I think we may account for them both by the same Principles in Nature. Men, as has been said, in Sleep see Visions, hold Discourses, and sometimes very good Ones, with Phantoms of their own Imaginations, and can walk about, climb over Houses and Precipices, which no Man who is awake durst venture to do. Men in Distempers see Spirits, talk and reason with them, and often fancy themselves to be what they are not. Melancholy Men have believ'd that they were Glass Bottles, Pitchers, Bundles of Hay, Prophets, and sometimes, that they were dead; and yet, in all other Actions of Life, have behav'd themselves with Discretion; and as these Things have happen'd often, few or none are surpriz'd at them, and therefore treat them only as Subjects of Jest or Merriment: But if they had happen'd but once, or seldom, we should either not have believ'd them, or have recur'd to Miracle or Witchcraft for the Solution. No Man wonders at the Sun's Rising every Day, and yet all are amaz'd and frighten'd by seeing a blazing Star once in their Life-time, tho' that is certainly the less Wonder of the two.

Now what Stretch will it be upon our Imagination, to believe that once in an Age, or more, a catching Distemper of the Mind should actuate a Man or two, and communicate itself afterwards to others of the same Complexion, the same Temperament of Juices, and consequently the same Dispositions of Mind, which certainly are as infectious as those of the Body, tho' not so observably. We assimilate to the Passions, Habits, and Opinions of those we converse with, and their Tempers are catching. This indeed is not true in all Instances; neither does a Plague infect every Body, but only those who have proper Juices, and suitable Dispositions of Body to receive it. We see often, that the yawning of one Man, will make a whole Company yawn; and the Sight of Men in convulsive Distempers will will throw others into the same ; as many People were agitated with the same Motions and Spirit of Prating, who went to see the French Prophets fall into their Trances, with a Design only to divert themselves, which Trances undoubtedly were an unusual Kind of Epileptick Fits, which often actuate the Organs of Speech without the Patient's knowing it, and have often been mistaken for divine Trances, and their incoherent Rapsodies been esteem'd Revelations.

If we may believe Mr. Barclay, and Mr. George Keith, in his Magick of Quakerism, (who was once of that Sect, and afterwards took Orders in the Church of England,) the same thing has happen'd to many others who went to insult the Quakers, and were caught by their Shakings, Groanings, and the Solemnity of their silent Meetings, and became afterwards steady Converts. I think it is Thucydides, who tells us, That at Abdera, a City in Greece, upon a hot Day, all the Spectators who were present in the Theatre to see Andromache acted, were suddenly seiz'd with a Madness, which made them pronounce lambsicks ; and the whole Town was infected with the Distemper, which lasted as long as that Weather continued. And he tells us too of another sort of Madness, which seiz'd the young Women of Athens, many of whom kill'd themselves ; and the Magistrates could not stop the Contagion, till they made a Decree, that those who did so, should be expos'd, and hung up naked. There seems to be no Difficulty, in conceiving that the Effluvia, which steam from the Body of an Enthusiast, should infect others suitably qualify'd with the same Distempers, as Experience shews us, that the minute Particles, which are convey'd by the Bite of a mad Dog, cause Madness, and will make the Person infected bark like the Dog who bit him; and such Particles in other Instances may be convey'd through the Pores, and in a common Instance undoubtedly are so; for many People will swoon if a Cat is in the Room, tho' they do not see her. And all infectious Distempers must be communicated by those Passages.

Some Distempers, or Dispositions of Body, make Men rave; others make them melancholy: Some give them Courage, Impetuosity, prodigious Energy of Mind, and rapturous Thoughts and Expressions; others sink and depress their Spirits, give them pannick Fears, dismal Apprehensions, melancholy Images, and secret Frights; and they will all account for such Sensations from their former imbib'd Prejudices by early Education, and by long Use became familiar to them. One of these Distempers will make a flaming false Prophet, and the other a despairing Penitent, in spite of the Mercies of God; and afterwards Physick, or Abstinence, shall cure the first, and a Bottle of Wine, now and then moderately and chearfully taken, in agreeable Company, shall make the other a Man of this World again.

Opium in different Constitutions will work both these Extremes, and other Drugs will give give temporary Madness. The Oricular Priests of old well understood this Secret of Nature. The High Priestess of Delphos suck'd Inspiration from the Fumes of an intoxicating Well, which disorder'd her Brain, made her rave, and utter incoherent Speeches, out of which something was found out to answer the devout Querist, and tell the Meaning of the God: And in the Temple, as I remember, of Amphiaraus, where Oracles were convey'd in Dreams, the humble and submissive Votary was let down into a deep Hole, that had several fantastical Apartments, where he saw Sights and Apparitions, which his Mind was prepar'd to receive before by Physick, suitable Diet, and sometimes by Fasting; and then he was wrapp'd up in the Skins of Victims, rubb'd and impregnated with intoxicating Drugs, which made him Dream most reverently; and when he related his Visions, it was very hard Luck if the Priests could find nothing in them for their Purpose; but if that happen'd to be the Case, the same Operation was tried over again; and if they had no better Fortune then, the God was angry with the impious Seeker for his Sins, and so was become sullen, and the poor Miscreant was sent away as an excommunicate Person, (if he had the good Luck to escape so,) and perhaps hang'd himself in his Way home.

We see and feel, by constant Experience, that our Thoughts in Dreams are lascivious, frightful, or pleasing, according to the Temperament of our Bodies, the Food we eat, or as our Spirits are oppress'd or cherish'd by it.

We

We see too, that drunken or distemper'd Men are overcome by Liquour, or Disease, and made to talk, reason, and act differently from what they do in Sobriety and in Health; and we all confess such Discourses and Actions to be the Indispositions of their Organs, and the Operations of external or internal material Causes, and will yet not account for other Sensations equally extravagant from like Mediums, though we cannot shew any Difference between them: However, as it is not to be deny'd, but Almighty God has sometimes communicated himself to particular Persons by secret Impressions upon their Senses and Understandings, so I dare not affirm, that he may not, and does not do so still; nor will I dogmatically assert, that any one who pretends to feel his divine Spirit, is a Lyar or Enthusiast; but I think I may safely affirm, that no one is concern'd in his Visions or Revelations but himself; unless the other feels them too, or he can prove the Truth of them by Miracles.

Almighty God, as has been said, has given to us Reason to distinguish Truth from Falshood, Imposture from Revelation, Delusion from Inspiration; and when we quit that Light, we must wander through endless Mazes and dark Labyrinths, and ramble wherever Fancy, Imagination, or Fraud, leads us. If Mr. Barrley had meant, only by the Testimony of the Spirit, that natural Faculty, or Principle, that the Deity has inspir'd into all Men to regulate their Actions, and to acknowledge his Divine Bounty, (which Principle I call Reason,) and could have reconcil'd the Workings

ings of his Light to the only one I can find in my self, I could readily have subscrib'd to a very great Part of his System; for I must confess it to be most beneficent to the World, in my Opinion, most agreeable to the Scriptures, and makes them, or rather shews them, to be most consistent with themselves, and comprehends every Thing which has been since said by the best Writers for Liberty of Conscience, and against all Sorts of religious Impositions. And this he has done with as much Wit, happy Turn, and Mastery of Expression, as is consistent with the Plainness and Simplicity affected by those of his Sect, and for the most part used in the holy Writings.

I am, &c.

S I R,

I KNOW well, that any one must run a great deal of Hazard, who shall advance any Opinions against what is vulgarly call'd Charity, though it be ever so much mistaken or miscall'd, as for the most Part it is, and ever has been. The giving loose Money in the Streets to canting and lazy Beggars, has obtain'd the Name of Charity, though it is generally a mischievous Liberality to encourage present Idleness, or to reward past Extravagancy, and is forbid by severe Laws. The Founding

Founding of Monasteries, Nunneries, and other miscall'd Religious Houses, has pass'd too upon the World in late Ages for Charity, though they have ever prov'd Seminaries of Superstition and of Papal Tyranny, Discouragements of Matrimony, the Sources of Depopulation, and have made Multitudes of People useless to the World, and to themselves : The giving Lands and Revenues to saucy, aspiring, and lazy Ecclesiasticks, has been reputed meritorious Actions ; and yet they have ever destroy'd Religion, increas'd the Pride and Domination of the Clergy, and depress'd, impoverish'd, and enslav'd the Laity, for whose Sakes alone there ought to be any Ecclesiasticks at all. The Founding and Endowing Universities, Colleges, and Free-Schools, carries an Appearance of promoting Sciences, Learning, and true Religion ; and yet they have been made use of to promote the Kingdom of Antichrist, to debauch the Principles of the Nobility and Gentry ; to deprave their Understandings ; advance learned Ignorance ; load their Heads with airy Chimera's and fairy Distinctions ; fill States with desperate Beggars and Divines of Fortune, who must force a Trade for Subsistence, and become the Cudgels and Tools of Power or Factions. A learned Author justly compares these Establishments to the Trojan Horse, which carried Hosts of armed Men within its Bowels, to send them out afterwards to destroy Kingdoms.

But there is another new-fangled Charity risen up amongst us, called Charity-Schools, which, I think, threatens the Publick more than than all which I have mention'd. I would not be understood to condemn every Thing of that Nature; for, under a proper Regulation, something like it may be commendable: But, as they are now employ'd and manag'd, I can see no Good that can accrue to the Publick from them, but apprehend a great deal of Mischief. These Establishments were first begun and encourag'd by pious Men, and many of them Dissenters; and then our High Clergy every where exclaim'd against them as dangerous Innovations, and Attempts to subvert the Church, and the National Religion: But now that they have got them under their own Management, and they really prove what they foretold they would prove, they make continual Harangues and Panegyrical Elogiums upon them, and upon the Persons who promote them: It is become Part of their Duty, (and much better executed than all the rest,) to prate People out of their Money; to decoy superstitious and factious Men out of their Shops and their Business, and old doting Women out of their Infirmarys, to hear too often seditious Harangues upon the Power of the Clergy, and of the Reverence due to them, and upon the Merit of nursing up Beggars to be the blind Tools of ambitious Pedants; and Lectures and Instructions are there given them, inconsistent with our present Establishment of Church and State; and we have scarce a News-Paper but gives Notice of Sermons to be preach'd upon this Occasion.

It is certain there was almost every where a general Detestation of Popery, and Popish pish Principles, and a noble Spirit for Liberty, at or just before the Revolution; and the Clergy seem'd then as zealous as the foremost: But when the corrupt Part of them found themselves freed from the Dangers they complain'd of, and yet could not find their separate and sole Advantage in the Revolution, they have been continually attacking and undermining it; and since they saw it was impossible to persuade those who were Witnesses and Sufferers under the Oppressions of the former Governments, wantonly, and with their Eyes open, to throw away their Deliverance, they went a surer and more artful Way to Work, though more tedious and dilatory; and therefore have, by insensible Degrees, corrupted all the Youth whose Education has been trusted to them, and who could be corrupted; so that at the End of near forty Years, the Revolution is worse establish'd than when it began: New Generations are risen up, which know nothing of the Sufferings of their Fathers, and are taught to believe, there were never any such: The Dread of Popery is almost lost amongst us; the vilest Tenets of it are openly asserted and maintain'd; Men are taught to play with Oaths; and it is become fashionable to revile Authority more for its commendable Actions, than for its Excesses: The Principles of our Nobility and Gentry are debauch'd in our Universities, and of our common People in our Charity-Schools, who are taught, as soon as they can speak, to blabber out High Church and Ormond; and so are bred up to be Traytors, 'before they know what Treason signifies.

This has been long seen, and as long complain'd of; and yet no Remedy has been apply'd, tho' often promis'd: Those, whose Duty and Business it ought to have been, have had their Time and Thoughts so wholly engag'd in modelling Factions, and enriching themselves, that this great Evil has been suffer'd to go on, and still goes on; it has been continually increasing, and yet increases; but I hope, at last, that those in Authority will take the Alarm, will think their own Safety, and the Safety of his Majesty and his People, are highly concerned to remove a Mischief which is levell'd at all their, and our, Happiness; and that they will not, like their Predecessors, disoblige all their Friends to gratify their Enemies, whom yet they cannot gratify. If this is not done, any one, without much Skill in Politicks, may safely affirm, That our present Establishment cannot long subsist. A free Government must subsist upon the Affections of the People; and if those Affections are perpetually debauch'd; if the Education of Youth is all against it, and it must depend only upon Converts, Pensions, or Armies, its Duration cannot be long, without a constant Succession of Miracles: Armies will soon find their own Strength, and will play their own Game: Foreign Armies will neither be thought on, nor born; and 'tis to be fear'd, that domestick Ones, upon every Disgust, or Prospect of Advantage, may fall into the Intrigues and Resentments of their Countrymen men when they grow to be general, and consequently will be of least Use when most wanted : We cannot, sure, so soon forget what the Parliament-Army did formerly, and King James's lately, and what was expected from our own in the late Conspiracy ; and without such Expectations, it had been direct Madnesse to have form'd or engag'd in such an Attempt, and the Criminals had been more properly sent to Bedlam than to Tyburn, though they deserv'd both.

But to apply my self more immediately to the Charity-Schools, I shall endeavour to shew, that under the false Pretence and Affectation of Charity, they destroy real Charity, take away the usual Support and Provision from the Children of lesser Tradesmen, and often of decay'd and unfortunate Merchants and Gentlemen, and pervert the Benevolence, which would be otherwise bestow'd upon helpless Widows, and poor House-Keepers, who cannot by reason of Poverty, maintain their Families.

Every Country can maintain but a certain Number of Shop-Keepers, or Retailers of Commodities, which are raised or manufactured by others ; and the fewer they are, the better ; because they add nothing to the publick Wealth ; but only disperse and accommodate it to the Convenience of Artificers, Manufacturers, and Husbandmen, or such who live upon their Estates and Professions ; and serve the Publick only by directing and governing the rest ; but as there must be many Retailers of other Men's Industry, and the greatest Part of them will be but just able to support themselves; with great Pains, Frugality, and Difficulty breed up their Families, and be able to spare small Sums out of their little Substance to teach their Children to write and cast Account, and to put them out Apprentices to those of their Degree; so those Employments ought to fall to their Share; but now are mostly anticipated, and engross'd by the Managers of the Charity-Schools; who out of other People's Pockets, give greater Sums than the others can afford, only to take the lowest Dregs of the People, from the Plough and Labour, to make them Tradesmen, and by Consequence drive the Children of Tradesmen to the Plough, to beg, to rob, or to starve.

The same may be said of Servants, who are generally the Children of the lesser Shop-Keepers, though sometimes of decay'd Merchants and Gentlemen, who have given them an Education above the lower Rank of People, which has qualified them to earn a comfortable Subsistence this Way, without much Labour; to which they have never been used. Now I have often heard, that one Advantage propos'd by these Charity-Schools, is to breed up Children to Reading and Writing, and a sober Behaviour, that they may be qualified to be Servants: A Sort of idle and rioting Vermin, by which the Kingdom is already almost devoured, and are become every where a publick Nuisance, and Multitudes of them daily, for Want of Employment, betake themselves to the Highway, House-breaking, others others Robbing and Sharping, or to the Stews; and must do so, if we study new Methods to encrease their Numbers.

I have mentioned another Mischief which has flowed from this pretended Charity; for it has in Effect, destroyed all other Charities, which were before given to the Aged, Sick, and Impotent. I am told, there is more collected at the Church-Doors in a Day, to make these poor Boys and Girls appear in Caps and Livery-Coats, than for all other Poor in a Year; and there is Reason to presume, that less still is given to private Charities, where the Givers are almost the only Witnesses of their own Actions; so that this Benevolence is a Commutation or Composition for what was formerly given to Widows, Orphans, and to broken and unfortunate House-keepers. And how should it be otherwise, when the Clergymen in highest Repute, strole about from Church to Church, and print publick Advertisements of Charity Sermons to be preached, recommending the Merit of this Sort of Liberality, the Service it does to God and the Church; and but faintly, or perhaps not at all, exhorting to any other, in so much, that the Collections made every Winter, by Virtue of the King's Letter, for the many Miserable in this great Town, visibly decrease, though these Collections are made from House to House, though the Names of the Givers, and Sums given, are entered down, and though all Ministers are directed by his Majesty and the Bishop of London, in their Sermons, to press this Charity upon their Congregations, which is notwithstanding, seldom done, but in a faint Manner, perhaps, at the End of a Sermon; whereas, on the other Occasion, the Ears of the Auditors are deafned with the Cry of the Preacher, and their Passions are all inflamed to a profuse Liberality; and those who do not give, and give largely too, must incur Reproach and Contumely.

Oh! but say some pious, and many more impious and hypocritical People, What would you hinder poor Boys and Girls from being well cloathed, from serving God, and being bred Scholars? To which I answer, That there are few Instances, in which the Publick has suffer'd more, than in breeding up Beggars to be what are called Scholars; from the grave Pedant and the solemn Doctor, down to the humble Writer and Caster of Accompts; to attain which Characters does not require the Pains and Acuteness that are necessary to make a good Cobler; and yet they immediately fancy themselves to be another Rank of Mankind, think they are to be maintained in Idleness, and out of the Substance of others, for their fancied Accomplishments; are above Day-Labour, and by an idle Education, require a Listlessness to it; and when they can't find the Sort of Subsistence they aspire to, are always perplexing the World, and disturbing other People; so that no Education ought to be more discountenanc'd by a State than putting Chimera's and airy Notions into the Heads of those who ought to have Pickaxes in their Hands; and teaching People to read, write,

write, and cast Accompt, who, if they are employed as they ought to be, can have no Occasion to make use of them, unless it be now and then to read the Bible, which they seldom or never do; and besides, are told by their spiritual Guides, that they must not understand it.

What Benefit can accrue to the Publick, By taking the Dregs of the People out of the Kennels, and throwing their Betters into them? By lessening the Numbers of Day-Labourers, by whose Industry alone, Nations are supported, and the publick Wealth encreased? To multiply the Number of such who add nothing to it, but must live out of the Luxury of the rest? To take Boys and Girls from the low and necessary Employments of Life, make them impatient of the Condition they were born to, and in which they would have thought themselves happy, to be Sempstresses, Footmen, and Servant Maids, and teach them to read Ballads? How much more useful a Charity would it be, to give the same Sums to their Parents to help them to raise their Families, and breed up their Children to Spinning or Hard-Labour, to help to maintain themselves, and to depend for the future upon their own Hands for Subsistence? Whereas, this Sort of Charity is of no Use, Benefit, or Ease to their Parents, who must find them Meat, Drink, Washing, and some Clothes, the whole Time they spend at School, and lose, at the same time, the little they can otherwise earn, or what they would earn themselves, whilst they employ their Children in going on Errands, and doing little Offices, which they can do as well? And all this for the Pleasure of seeing them a little better Cloathed, hearing them sing Psalms, and repeating by Rote a Catechism made for that Purpose.

The Pretence that this Sort of Education will render them more useful Members of Society, and will make them more virtuous and religious, is a meer Chimera. How many are hanged at Tyburn that can write and read; or rather how few that cannot? And generally they all die for High Church, and for the Right Line! Who are greater Rogues than Scholars, as they are called? And what Set of People have supplied the Town with more Whores than our spiritual Fathers, who all have the Practice of Piety by them? Nothing keeps the Herd of Mankind so honest, as breeding them up to Industry, and keeping them always employed in Hard-Labour, and letting them have no Time or Inducements from Necessity to rob, cheat, or Superfluities to debauch with. Who are the Persons who have the Conduct, and are at the Head of these Charity-Schools? Are they Men of the most exemplary Piety and Morals? No, I am told the quite contrary: They are, for the most Part, staunch Jacobites, or, in other Words, furious High-Church-Men; often Men of debauched Lives and Principles; and the Masters of these Schools are generally Enemies to the Establishment. And what Use do they make of their Power? Why! they supply the Children with what they

they want out of their own Shops ; get Credit and Interest amongst their Neighbours, for their charitable Disposition ; make use of that Credit to promote Disaffection to the Government ; engage the Parents and Friends of the Children in the Interest of a Popish Pretender, and breed up the Children themselves to fight his Battels in due Time.

I have been very much diverted to see, now and then, one of these Poor Creatures skip over a Kennel as nimble as a Greyhound, to get to the other Side of the Way, that it may be ready to make a low Bow to a Parson as he passed by ; which Order of Men they are taught almost to adore ; and I have been often told, (though I do not affirm, and can scarce believe it to be true,) that their Duty to the Clergy is inserted in a Catechism that is or has been taught them ; but whether such a Catechism is committed to Print or Writing, or not, it is certain their Duty to God is not half so much, I will not say, inculcated into them, but observ'd by them, as the Reverence and Respect which they are made to believe is due to these Holy Men. And what Use will be made of this blind Adoration to such Persons and their Power, we may easily judge by what Use ever has been made of it, which I think is well worth the Time and Thoughts of publick Authority, as of all Men who wish Well to their King, their Country, and Themselves, to seriously reflect upon, and to provide against, before it is too late, and the Mischief is accomplish'd.

S I R,

IT is surprizing what minute and contemptible Causes create Discontents, Disorders, Violence, and Revolutions amongst Men; what a small Spring can actuate a mighty and many-headed Multitude; and what mighty Numbers one Man is capable of drawing into his Disgusts and Designs. It is the Weakness of the many; when they have taken a Fancy to a Man, or to the Name of a Man, they take a Fancy even to his Failings, adopt his Interest right or wrong, and resent every Mark of Disfavour shewn him, however just and necessary it be. Nor are their Resentments and Fondness the less violent for being ill-grounded: If a Man makes them Drunk once or twice a Year, this Injury is a Kindness which they never forget; and he is sure of their Hearts and their Hands for having so generously robb'd them of their Time, their Innocence, and their Senses. They are grateful for the Mischief done them; and in Return, are ready to do any for him. He who restrains them from Drunkenness, or even punishes them for it, is a greater and a real Benefactor; but such a Benefactor as they will never forgive, and he is sure to lose their good Will, probably to purchase their Hatred.

This

This shews how much their Senses are stronger than their Understandings. They are govern'd not by Judgment, but by Sensations; and, one Guinea in Drink, obliges them more than two in Clothes; or in any other dry Way. Liquor warms their Hearts; and fills them with the Man, who is the Author of so much Joy. So that to instruct them, feed them, and employ them, are not such sure Ways to win them, as to mislead and inflame them, and to waste their Time. For this Reason, the sober, and the sensible Clergyman is never so popular, as the loud, the factious, and the hot-headed. Rational and sober Instruction is a cold Thing, and goes no farther than the Understanding: But Noise and Raving awaken and intoxicate the animal Spirits, and set the Blood on Fire, and have all the Effects of Wine.

So that in raising Parties and Factions, Inflaming goes a thousand Times further than Reasoning and Teaching. A foolish Speech, supported with Vehemence and Brandy, will conquer the best Sense, and the best Cause in the World, without Anger or Liquor. Sobriety and Capacity are not Talents that recommend to the Crowd, who are always taken with shallow Pomp and Sound, and with Men of little Restraints. The Debauch'd and the Superstitious have great Hold of them; Men who will sin with them, or Men who can give them Amulets against the Vengeance due to Sinning. But Men who will neither corrupt them, nor deceive them, are to them distasteful Stoicks, or frighful Infidels, dels, and sometimes us'd as such. One may at any Time gain an Interest in a Mob with a Barrel of Beer, or without it, by the Means of a few odd Sounds, that mean nothing, or something very wild or wicked. Let any Superstition, though ever so wild or foolish, be advanced by one who has Credit enough to deceive them; let any favourite Party Watch-Word be invented, and pronounc'd in such a Tone and such a Posture, it soon becomes Sacred, and in the highest Esteem; and woe be to him that speaks against a Mystery: Every Argument shall be an Affront and a Sign of Unbelief; which is a Crime always highest, and most hated when it is best grounded. The Managers of the Charm, on the contrary, are Men of vast Reverence, Moment, and Popularity; and a Zeal for the Charm creates Guards and Revenues to the Charmers. If you go about to expose the Imposture, and unfold the Cheat, you are a Foe to all Religion, and will believe nothing without Evidence. The Superstition grows in establish'd Repute, and 'tis dangerous to oppose it, till some other, often more absurd, and consequently more prevailing, undermines and exterminates it: For there is that Propensity in most Men to Delusion and Grimace, that they seldom recur to the plain and aimable Precepts taught in the Scripture, and to a Religion without Shew, Pageantry, and Ceremonies; but Superstition almost always subsists in some Shape or other, and grows strong and revered in Proportion to its Weakness, Nonsense, and Absurdity: As it is admired in Proportion as it is foolish or wonderful, it is believed in Proportion as it is incredible: So that the Credulity of the People for the most Part, follows the wise Improvement of Nonsense: Cupidine ingenii humani libentius obscura credi. Tacit.

Considering the Weakness of Man's Nature, prone to imaginary Fears, and to lean upon imaginary Props, and to seek imaginary Cures, limited Deluders are often to be born; but the worst is, they will not be limited, but extend their Guile to Instances where it is not wanted; and from managing his Whims, assume a Right to direct his Property, his Eating and Drinking, and every Part of his Behaviour, and turn Canting, and telling Dreams, into Authority and Ruling.

The Ægyptians have been always a most superstitious Nation, always under the Dominion of their Priests, and consequently prone to Tumults and Insurrections. Their Priests were at one Time arriv'd to that monstrous Pitch of Power and Tyranny, that they us'd to dispatch their Kings by a Message. If they did but signify their pious Pleasure, that his Majesty was to cut his Throat, he durst not refuse, but must humbly take the Razor, and be his own Executioner. But the Power of the Priests was weakened, and the Danger of frequent Rebellions prevented by the following Stratagem of one of the Princes. He consider'd the Madness of the Multitude after their Gods, and their Priests; and that their Unity in religious Phrenzy and Nonsense dispos'd them to Unanimity in their their Civil Rage. He therefore divided Ægypt into several Districts, and endow'd every District with its peculiar and separate Deities. He knew, that if they differ'd about their Gods, or divine Cattle, and Vegetables of Worship, and about the Rites paid them, they would agree about nothing else, and consequently never to conspire against him. One Division had for its Deity a Monkey, another had a Cat, another a Crocodile, another a Kite; and some ador'd Leeks and Garlick, Savoury Gods of their own planting.

*O Sanctas gentes, quibus hæc nascuntur in hortis
Numina!* —

This Dividend of Deities had the desir'd Effect. The several Districts abhorr'd all the neighbouring celestial Gentry as intensely and madly as they doated on their own; and were ready to spill their Blood, either offensively, or defensively, for the Honour and Interest of these their different Divinities. Hence the religious and bloody War between two neighbouring Towns, finely describ'd by Juvenal with his usual Force and Indignation.

*Inter finitimos vetus atque antiqua simultas,
Immortale odium & nunquam sanabile vulnus
Ardet adhuc, Ombas & Tentyra. Summus utrinque
Inde furor vulgo, quod numina vicissim
Odit uterque locus; cum solos credit habendos
Esse deos quos ipse colit.* — Juv. Sat. 15.

When

When People are once divided in their Affections, every Thing, however innocent and indifferent, if it be peculiar to the one, becomes a Mark of Iniquity, and an Object of Hatred to the other. A different Hat or Coat becomes the Source of Resentment, when perhaps a Cloak or a Ruff creates Friendship and Esteem. A Judgment is made of the Hearts of Men by their Habit, and particular good or bad Qualities are annex'd to Cloth and Colours. There are Instances of Monarchs depos'd and murder'd by their People for wearing a foreign Dress, or for speaking a foreign Language: And there are Instances of Nations persecuted, wasted, and laid in Blood by their Princes, for using, or not using, particular Gestures and Sounds, which their Highnesses had taken a liking to; and of Princes us'd the same Way by their People for the same Reason.

If they take an Affection to the Word Abracadabra, tho' they join to it no certain Idea, they think themselves justified in oppressing, and sometimes in butchering, all who do not profess the same vehement Affection to the same senseless Sound. But the Man who is loud and mutinous for Abracadabra is their Darling: They grow fond of him for being fond of their Word: His Fondness is a Compliment to them; and they will venture Life and Limb for a Cheat, or a Blockhead, who opens his Mouth just as they do others. Their Zeal is the fiercer, because it is blind. If they fall religiously in love with an Ape, or an Ox, or with those that tend him, him, as the Aegyptians did, he is presently a Blasphemer, who does not debase his Understanding, and forfeit his Sincerity, by sacrificing shamefully and devoutly to these brute Creatures, and by reverencing and pampering the solemn Merry Andrews that look after them.

The great Island of Madagascar is divided into two great Parts and Parties, who are at fierce Strife and everlasting War about a sanctify'd Elephant's Tooth, which both own to have come down from Heaven, and both pretend to have it; and I am not sure whether it has not work'd Miracles on both Sides: But as neither Side will allow the other to have it, they hate one another as much as they love and hate the said Tooth. Great is the Elephant of Madagascar, and the Tusk which fell down from Jupiter!

The Turks and the Persians are equally the devout, the blind, and bigotted Followers of Mahomet, and differ in no Point of Doctrine. This Doctrinal Unanimity, one would think, must be a powerful Bond of Union, at least of religious Union, between the two Empires. But no such Matter: They treat one another as execrable Hereticks and Infidels, and do not hate the Christians more, though their only Difference in Opinion is, that the Turks hold Omar for the true Successor of Mahomet, and the Persians maintain that Ali was. They tie their Religion, at least the Efficacy thereof, to the Succession, and deny that there can be any Salvation in any Church where the uninterrupted Succession is not kept up: So that each Side is damn'd in the Opinion of each. This Hatred and Division is increas'd by another momentous Difference, the Difference of the Colours and Caps which they wear. The Turks wear white Turbants, and the Persians wear red Bonnets. These are such abominable Marks of Heresy and Schism, as deserves to be expiated with Blood: And therefore that Heresy has always been assign'd as a principal Cause of their many mutual Invasions, merciless Wars, and Devestations.

I wish I could not say, that the wise and grave English Nation have had also their holy and outrageous Quarrels about Words and Motions, Gape and Cloth, Bonnets and Colours, and about the Eastern and Western Situation of Joint-Stools; Thank God it is not quite so bad at present, no Thanks to our Education.

I would, for a Conclusion to this Letter, only desire it to be consider'd, what Infamy and Contempt it reflects upon the human Understanding, and indeed upon the human Species, to be thus apt to run into Discord and Animosities upon such wretched and unmanly Motives; and what Monsters and Impostors they must be, who begin, or manage, or highten these absurd and impious Contentions amongst any Part of the Race of Men, already too unhappy by the Lot of Nature.

I am, &c.

S I R,

AS I have lately given you the genuine Meaning of two very Nonsensical Words, as they are vulgarly understood, to wit, Hereditary Right; so in this I shall a little animadvert upon two other Words in as much Use, I mean the Words Indelible Character; which I chuse to do, because no small Number of Ecclesiasticks, and some I have heard of the highest Character, dare to assert, that though the late Bishop of Rochester is depriv'd of his Bishoprick, and expell'd the Kingdom, yet that He remains a Bishop of the Universal Church; which are some more nonsensical Words: Indeed, there is scarce a Theological System in the World, (legal Establishments excepted,) but contains almost as many Falshoods as Words, and as much Nonsense as Matter. Give the corrupt Priests but some odd, unintelligible, and ill-favour'd Word, suppose hic hæc hoc, trim tram, bew wew, fee fa fum, or any other Sound that is utterly void of any rational Meaning, and they shall instantly find profound Mystery in it, and fetch substantial Advantages out of it; and when they are got in full Possession of the said Word, you are damn'd if you deny it to be Sense, and damn'd if you endeavour to make Sense of it.

The

The Indelible Character, is one of their beloved Phrases, from which they derive great Importance and Authority, and yet is a palpable Contradiction to all common Sense: By it they mean a certain invifible Faculty, that is peculiar to themselves, of doing certain Duties, which they could have done as well before they had it. It is a divine Commission, or Power, to do that every where, which human Powers can hinder them from doing any where: It neither conveys Virtue, Holinefs, nor Understanding, and has no vifible Operation, but authorizes thofe who are poffefs'd of it to ufe certain Words, and perform certain Actions and Ceremonies, and act certain Motions, which moft other Men could pronounce, perform, and act as well as they can, but they tell us not with equal Effect; but then this Effect is no ways vifible, nor comprehenfible, but through Faith, and is far above all human Conception.

How then, and by what Marks, fhall we know that any one has attain'd to this Indelible Character? Not from Scripture, which is wholly filent about the Matter? Not by Succeffion from the Apoftles, who claimed no fuch Power, as is unanswerably proved in the Independant Whig, No. VI. and VII. Not from Reason, the Impossibility of it being there fully fhewn in No. XV. And the Wick- ednefs of pretending to it being as fully fhewn in No. XLVI. and XLVII. Not from the Laws of England, which oblige all Clergy- men to own, that they receive all Jurifdictis on and Authority whatsoever from the Crown, as is demonstratively proved in No. XIII. and XIV. and in No. XLVIII. and XLIX. It is as undeniably proved by numerous Texts, as well as the whole Bent of Scripture, that no one Christian has more Power than another, to perform all the Offices of Christianity; that the Holy Ghost fell upon all Believers alike, and that they had all the Power of doing Miracles, after they had received it; and I think it is as evident, that none of them have now the Power of doing Miracles, as this would be with a Witness, if a few Words pronounced, and few Motions performed, should give to any one new Qualities and Faculties which he had not before. I am sure, if this is a Miracle, it is an invisible One, and much like that of the Popish Transubstantiation; where though we are told, that the Bread and Wine are changed into Flesh and Blood, yet as to human Eyes they appear to be Bread and Wine still. We are so far from being told in Holy Writ, that Elders, Pastors, and Teachers, (for all Priesthood is plainly abolish'd by our Saviour in any other Sense than as all Christians are Priests,) are always to chuse one another; that even an Apostle in the first of the Acts is chosen by the Congregation, and by the casting of Lots.

But these Gentlemen are sometimes so modest, as to confess, that holy Orders do really convey neither Piety, Morals, Learning, nor encrease the natural Faculties in any Respect: I desire therefore to know of them, what they are good for, unless to declare, that such

such a Man has undertaken to execute an Office, and that he has natural or acquired Qualifications sufficient to perform it? And this Trust is for the most Part committed to Clergymen, who are presumed best to understand their own Trade; and the Ceremony they use to signify that Declaration, are laying on of Hands, and a Form of Words, prescribed by Act of Parliament; which Ceremony has obtained the Name of Consecration and Ordination. Now suppose the Law had appointed another Form to be executed only by Laymen, as by throwing a Sword over his Head, and by putting a Cap and long Gown upon him; would not the same Man, with the same Qualifications, be just as good a Pastor; or suppose the Bishop, who ordained him through some Mistake, had not himself gone through all the Operation, would the Person ordain'd been ever the worse? There is no Appearance that our modern Operators have any Discernment of Spirits; if they had, I presume we should not have had so many Jacobites in Holy Orders; and 'tis evident in Fact, whenever the Parishes chuse their own Parsons, they are at least as good Ones as those who are recommended to us by our spiritual Fathers. 'Tis certain our Laws know nothing of this Gibberish, but declare Laymen capable of all Sorts of Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction; and when the Bishops consecrate one another, or ordain Priests, they do it ministerially from the Crown, and formerly took out a Commission from the Crown, to ordain Presbyters; and the King now constitutes Bishops in Ireland by Commission, and they will be good ones, and be able to perform all the Episcopal Office, though they were never consecrated, and formerly they were granted by Patent in Scotland, and only durant bene placito.

Now let us consider, What is the Meaning of the Word Bishop, and wherein his Office consists. It is a Power or Jurisdiction given to do certain Actions within a certain District, which District is limited by human Laws; and he must not execute his Power in any other Bishop's District, under the Penalty of Schism, and human Punishment; and what is this Jurisdiction? It is a Power to name a Lay-Chancellor if he pleases, who is to enquire after, and punish certain carnal Crimes, without consulting or taking any Notice of the Bishop himself, who constituted him; and Excommunication is the legal Process he is to use, and the Punishment he is to inflict. The Bishop has, moreover, a Power to examine into the Qualifications of those who desire to be admitted into Orders, and to admit them, or reject them, as he finds them capable, or incapable; and after they are admitted, to inspect into their Behaviour, in some Respects, and to punish them according to stated Laws. And what is this Priestly Office? It is to read Prayers, appointed by Act of Parliament, publicly to the Congregation, to read aloud certain Chapters out of the Bible, appointed by publick Authority to be read on particular Days, to pick out a Text or two every Sunday, and harangue upon it to the People; to administer minister the Sacraments by a Form of Words prescribed by Law, to visit the Sick, exhort and rebuke, and to take the Tythes. The Bishop besides is to be a Lord of Parliament, to have one or more Thousands per Annum, and to bless People when they are upon their Knees.

Now what Part of all this may not be as well executed, by what Ceremony soever the Person officiating is appointed, or if he is appointed without any Ceremony at all. May not a Bishop constitute a Lay-Chancellor to hear smutty Causes, and to excommunicate the Guilty, till they buy themselves out of Purgatory again for a Sum of Money? Cannot he equally enquire into the Capacities of those who are Candidates for the Priesthood, as they call it, and to deprive or otherwise punish them as the Law directs? Might not he equally sit in the House of Lords, and vote for the just Prerogative of the Crown, the Good of the Church; make the most of his Revenues, only for the Sake of his Successor, and say, God bless you to any who will ask it upon his Knees? Might not a private Man, though a Bishop's Hand had never touched his Periwig, read aloud the publick Prayers and the Chapters for the Day, when he can read at all, without any new Inspiration; talk half an Hour or more about the Meaning of a plain Text; exhort his Parishioners to be good Churchmen; rail at and revile Dissenters; read the legal Form of Baptism, and sprinkle an Infant; carry about the Bread and Wine to the Communicants; repeat the Words

Words appointed in the Common-Prayer Book to be said on that Occasion; gather in Tythes very carefully, and put any One into the Spiritual Court that does not pay them.

Now, Sir, what is Deprivation, but by publick Authority to hinder them from doing these Things; that is, to take away the Power it has given them? I think it is agreed by them all, that some of these Powers may be taken away, namely, the Bishops being Members of the Upper House, their Baronies and Revenues, their Lordships, their Dignities, their Spiritual Courts, their legal Jurisdiction within their former Districts; but still they remain good Bishops of the Universal Church; which Character is Indelible, and can never be taken away. But what they mean by the Universal Church, I can't guess, unless they mean all Christian Countries, or all Countries wherein there are Christians; and then it seems that Bishops may ordain Presbyters, and Bishops and Presbyters both may preach and pray, give the Sacraments, and excommunicate wherever there are any Christians; and if the Words Universal Church will extend to those who are no Christians, then they may do these Things through the whole World. But how will this agree with another orthodox Opinion, I think held by them all, that no Bishop can execute his Office in another's Diocese, and no Priest in another's Parish, against their Consent, without being guilty of Schism. And here almost all Christendom is cut off from their Ecclesiastical Juris-

Jurisdiction at once, and a good Part of Turky too, the Christians there having all Bishops (such as they are :) So that they are reduced to execute this Universal Power only in partibus infidelium ; and methinks, since Sovereign Authority is every where the same, Mahometan or Pagan Princes should have as much Power to hinder any one from conferring Offices in his Dominions, as Christian Princes have to confine him to a small Limit, and hinder him every where else ; for no more Power is necessary to one than to the other.

But to shew that I am in Charity with these Gentlemen, and am willing to agree with them as far as I can, I do admit, that no Government, either Christian, Mahometan, or Pagan, has any Authority to hinder a good Man from doing his Duty to God ; from saying his Prayers, and reading the Scriptures publicly ; from exhorting his Brethren from giving or receiving the Sacraments, or avoiding ill Company ; which is all that is meant in Scripture, by what we call Excommunication : All which Offices, or rather Duties, every Christian is empower'd by the Gospel to execute. And as the Clergy have been called upon oftner than once already to shew from Scripture, or Reason, that these Duties, or any of them, are appointed by God, to be perform'd by any Set or Order of Men whatsoever, independent of other Christians ; so I call upon them again to shew it, and I expect they will introduce plain and direct Texts, or, at least, as much Evidence as they would pay five Shillings upon on any other Occasion. And if they cannot do this, as I shall presume they cannot, till the contrary appears; then all this artificial Cant is plain Juggling, Hypocrisy, and Priestcraft.

If we will take some of their Words for it, there are many Things very strange and extraordinary in this Divine Trust: It may be given here below, but cannot be taken away again; for then it would not be Indeliable. It is a Power to execute Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction or Duty through the whole Earth, and yet may be confin'd to Dioceses, or Parishes: No human Authority can hinder those who are possess'd of it from executing it; and yet their Persons may be imprison'd, or put to Death, and so be wholly disabled to execute it: They may be render'd incapable of performing it by Diseases, Drunkenness, Gluttony, and Laziness; but not by Murder, Robbery, Treason, Blasphemy, or Atheism: Non-Execution, or wrong Execution, is no Forfeiture: It is the most tender and important of all Trusts; and yet no Crimes, how heinous or black soever, will disqualify a Man from holding and executing it: Whoever has once got it, can never part with it, but carries it with him to the Pillory and the Gallows; but whether it there leaves him, Authors are silent, or doubtful.

It can be given by one of them to another only by the Motion of the Hand, but not by Act of Parliament, and the Consent of the States of a great Kingdom, tho' the Head of the Church is one of them; and yet it must be

be given according to the Command of that one, and by a Form of Words enacted by all three. Whoever has it, must have a Call from the Holy Ghost, and yet must be examin'd whether he has common natural Qualifications; and when he has heard this Call, and his Qualifications are found sufficient, he need not execute what he is call'd to, but may hire another to do it for him; who must not execute it neither, unless he has an human Diocese, or an human Parish, or is employ'd by those who have. Is not this pretty Jargon, and worthy to be made an Article of Faith? Though it has had the ill Luck not to get in amongst the rest, and, what is worse, some of the rest directly contradict it.

The same invisible Faculty makes him, who is possess'd of it, neither wiser nor better; but yet he is to be much more respected, and his Authority to be much more regarded, provided he is zealous for the Notions which are Orthodox for the Time being; otherwise you may abuse him as much as you please, whether he is Most Reverend, Right Reverend, or only Plain Reverend; and you need not have any Reverence at all for him, tho' the Indelible Character sticks just where it did before. You must know this Indelible Character came down by an uninterrupted Succession from the Apostles; but then it being wholly invisible, and making no Alteration in the outward or inward Man, there is some Difficulty, and we are often at a Loss to know who has it. The most common outward and visible Signs are a broad-brim'd Hat, a long black Gown, and a Band, tho' others hold a Cloak, with a Cape to it, to be a better Criterion. But what will become of us, if some Heretick has formerly usurp'd these Holy Garments, without having pass'd through all the precedent Operation; and if he should have happen'd to have consecrated and ordain'd a great many others; then, alas! the whole Chain of Succession may have been broke, never to be pieced again by human Skill; and we can never know who amongst us are regular Christians, or in a regular Way of Salvation. Some are so wicked as to say, That this was the Case of many of our Protestant Bishops at the Reformation; which God forbid!

Nay, what is worse, the Orthodox differ amongst themselves about what Requisites are necessary to continue this Line of Succession. Many have affirm'd, That the Holy Ghost would not inhabit a Heretick, a Schismatick, a Simoniack, or an Atheist; and some have went so far, as to assert, That a Christian Bishop ought to be a Christian. Now it is certain, there have been many Bishops and Popes too, who did not believe one Word about Jesus Christ; and if this is Disqualification, then the Lord have Mercy upon those who have pretended to receive Orders from them, or under them, and upon such who received the Sacraments only by Succession from them.

Others have ventur'd to affirm, That no greater Power was necessary to take away Orders than to give them; and if so, the Pope and Church

Church of Rome have taken away all our Orders from us, and excommunicated us to a Man; and then a Question will arise, Whether any one, who is wholly turn'd out of the Church, can be a Bishop of the Church? and if not, all our Bench of Bishops are gone at once; for we all know that the Church of Rome is a true Church; and if the Clergy have any Authority from Scripture, all the Ecclesiastical Authority in the World was against the first Reformers, and they were all excommunicated together. They had certainly no Power to separate themselves from the Church of Rome, but what every Man in the World ever had, has now, and ever will have, to separate from any Church which he thinks to be erroneous, and of disowning all Ecclesiastical Authority, which does not take its Force from the Laws of the Country he lives under; and then it is only Civil Authority. I desire of the Gentlemen, who have always shewn themselves very happy at Distinctions, to clear up those Matters to us, that we may know whether we are Christians or not, and in the ordinary of Salvation.

I am, &c.

S I R,

IN my last I endeavour'd to give you a true Anatomy of the Indelible Character, and of the uninterrupted Succession, from whence are deriv'd most of the Absurdities of the Romish Church, and all the spiritual Equipage of their Popes, Patriarchs, Archbishops, Bishops, Parish-Priests, &c. as well as all the Powers claim'd by them in the Church. In this I shall give you their Genealogy; as also the Genealogy of their Cathedrals, their Altars, their lighted Candles upon them at Noon-day; their worshipping God towards the East, and a great deal more of their religious Trumpery. I cannot, after the most diligent Inquiry, find out the least Countenance for most, if any, of these fine Things, in the Christian Religion; and the Jewish is long since abolish'd. Our Saviour plainly intended to reduce Men to natural Religion, which was corrupted and defaced by the numerous Superstitions of the Jews, and by the absurd Idolatries of the Gentiles. The Doctrine which he taught, consisted only in Worshipping one God, and in doing Good to Men; and therefore he instituted a Religion without Priests, Sacrifices, and Ceremonies; a Religion which was to reside in the Heart, to consist in Spirit, and in Truth; and to shew itself outwardly wardly in virtuous Actions: But such a Religion would not gratify the Ambition and Pride of those who desir'd to Domineer over their Brethren, and to acquire from their Ignorance and Fears, Riches and Authority.

As therefore the Jewish Priests had, by their Traditions, and their fabulous Legands, corrupted the Law of Moses; so the Christian Clergy did by Degrees blend the Gospel, and the plain and easy Precepts of Christianity, with the most absurd Parts of the Jewish Traditions, and with the ridiculous Foppery of the Religion of the Gentiles; insomuch, than at the Reformation there was not left in the World any Thing that look'd like Christianity. The Pope and his Priests had pick'd out from all other Superstitions their most absurd, cruel, and wicked Parts and Principles; and having incorporated the same, with peculiar Absurdities of their own, made out of all such a wild Jumble of Nonsense and Impieties, as has driven Virtue, good Government, and Humanity, almost out of the World; given Rise to Mahometanism; and both together have almost extinguish'd the human Race; since there is not in those Countries, where these Religions entirely prevail, the Tenth Part of the People they could boast in the Times of the old Romans, nor in Proportion to the Numbers which China and Holland can boast; where the Priests have no Power, and but little Influence.

It would be endless to trace all the numerous Absurdities of the Romish Church, and to search the Sources from whence they are taken and stolen. I shall content my self here, to shew, that their whole Machinery is copied from the Religion of Zoroaster, and the Persian Magi, and shall quote no other Authority than the excellent and learned Dr. Prideaux; but give an Account of that Impostor and his Magi, altogether in the Doctor's own Words.

He tells us, That Zoroaster flourish'd in the Reign of Darius Hystaspes, (tho' others say, very long before, as he says, the Magi did, who, without doubt, held many of the same Opinions; he having only revived their Sect with some Alterations;) and he taught, that there was one supreme Being, independent and self-existent from all Eternity; that under him there were two Angels, one the Angel of Light, and the Author and Director of all Good; the other the Angel of Darkness, the Author and Director of all Evil; that this Struggle should continue to the End of the World, and then there should be a general Resurrection, and a Day of Judgment, wherein just Retribution should be render'd to all according to their Works; and the Angel of Darkness and his Disciples should go into a World of their own, where they should suffer in everlasting Darkness, the Punishment of their ill Deeds; and the Angel of Light and his Disciples should go into a World of their own, and receive in everlasting Light, the Rewards due to their good Deeds.

This Impostor pretended to have been taken up to Heaven, and there to have heard
God

God speak to him out of the Midst of the Fire ; and therefore he order'd Fire-Temples to be built, and erected Altars in them, upon which sacred Fires were kept and preserved, without being suffer'd to go out ; and all the Parts of their publick Worship were perform'd before these publick sacred Fires, as all their private Devotions were before private Fires in their own Houses : Not that they worshipped the Fire, but God in the Fire ; for God having spoken out of the Fire, he said, That it was the surest Sheminab of the Divine Presence ; That the Sun being the perfectest Fire that God had made, there was the Throne of his Glory, and the Evidence of his Divine Presence, in a more especial Manner than any where else ; for which Reason he order'd them to direct all their Worship towards the Sun, and next towards their sacred Fires ; and therefore they always approached them from the West Side ; that having their Faces towards them, and also towards the Rising Sun at the same Time, they might direct their Worship towards both ; for the Kebla of the Magians being the Rising Sun, they always worshipped with their Faces towards the East.

To gain the greater Reputation to his Pretensions, he retir'd to a Cave, and there liv'd a Recluse, pretending to be abstracted from all worldly Considerations, and to be wholly given up to Prayer, and Divine Meditations. Whilst he was in this Retirement, he compos'd the Book wherein his pretended Revelations are contain'd ; which consisted of twelve Volumes. The first contains the Liturgy of the Magi, and the rest treat of the other Parts of their Religion. In this Book he commands the same Observances about Beasts, clean and unclean, which Moses commands; gives the same Law of paying Tithes to the Sacerdotal Order; enjoins the same Care of avoiding all external and internal Pollutions; the same Way of cleansing and purifying themselves by frequent Washings; the same keeping the Priesthood always within one Tribe; and several other Institutions are also therein contain'd, of the same Jewish Extraction. The rest of its Contents are an Historical Account of the Life, Actions, and Prophecies of its Author; the several Branches and Particulars of his new reformed Superstition; and Rules and Exhortations to Holy Living; in which he is very pressing, and sufficiently exact, saving only in one Particular, which is about Incest, which the Doctor supposes is allow'd by him out of Flattery to the Persian Kings, who were exceedingly given to incestuous Marriages. This Book he pretends to have received from Heaven, and according as the Actions of his Sect agree or disgrace with it, they are esteem'd either good or evil.

His Priests, as is said, are to be all of one Tribe, and none but the Son of a Priest was capable of being a Priest; and his Priesthood he divided into three Tribes. The lowest were the inferior Clergy, who served in all the common Offices of their divine Worship. Next above these were the Superintendents, who who in their several Districts govern'd the inferiour Clergy, as the Bishops do amongst us; and above all, was the Archimagus, or Arch-Priest, who was the same as the High-Priest amongst the Jews, or the Pope now amongst the Romanists, and is the Head of the whole Religion: And, according to the Number of their Orders, the Temples and Churches in which they officiated, were of three Sorts. The lowest Sort, were there Parochial Churches, or Oratories, which were served by their inferior Clergy, as the Parochial Churches are now with us; and the Duties they there perform'd, were to read the daily Offices out of their Liturgy, and at stated and solemn Times to read some Part of their sacred Writings to the People. In these Churches there were no Fire-Altars; but the sacred Fire before which they worshipp'd, was maintain'd only with a Lamp. Next above these were the Fire Temples, in which Fire was continually kept burning on a sacred Altar; and these were in the same Manner as Cathedrals with us, the Churches or Temples were the Superintendent resided. In every one of these were also several of the inferior Clergy entertain'd, who, in the same Manner as the Choral Vicars with us, perform'd all the Divine Offices under the Superintendent, and also took Care of the sacred Fire, &c.

The highest Church above all was the Fire-Temple, where the Archimagus resided, which was had in the same Veneration with them, as the Temple of Meccha among the Mahometans, to which every one of that Sect thought thought themselves oblig'd to make a Pilgrimage once in their Lives; Zoroaster settled it at Balcb, and he and the Archimagus his Successors had their Residence there; but afterwards it was remov'd to Herman. This Temple of the Archimagus, as also their other Fire-Temples, were endow'd with large Revenues in Lands; but the Parochial Clergy depended only upon the Tythes and Offerings of the People. The Doctor observes afterwards, That this Impostor having wonderful Success in causing his Imposture to be received by the King, the Great Men, and the Generality of the whole Kingdom, he return'd to Balcb; where, according to his Institution, he was oblig'd to have his Residence, as Archimagus, or Head of the Sect; and there he reigned with the same Authority in Spirituals over the whole Empire, as the King did in Temporals.

The Doctor observes, and perhaps with Truth, That Zoroaster borrowed a great Part of his new Religion from the Jews, especially if he liv'd so late as he supposes him to have done, with some Appearance of Reason. But if the Impostor took his Doctrine of the Immortality of the Soul, and of Rewards and Punishments from them too, (which he also supposes,) it must have been from the Essenes, a Sect among the Jews, not exceeding four Thousand: For I cannot find any Mention made of that Doctrine in the Books of Moses, which contain their Laws, and promise only temporal Blessings and Punishments: And the Doctor himself, in another Place, tells us, That the Sadduces, who were the Gentle-

Gentlemen, and Men of Learning amongst them, did wholly disbelieve the Resurrection, future Rewards and Punishments, Angels and Spirits, and rejected all the Scriptures but the Law? And that the Pharisees, tho' they believ'd the Resurrection, yet thought it only a Pythagorean Resurrection, or Transmigration of the same Soul into another Body; And I think it is plain from the New Testament, that the full Revealing of this Truth was reserved to our Blessed Saviour, who brought Life and Immortality to Light: Tho' it is undoubtedly true, that some of the Jews held it as a Philosophical Opinion, probably taken from the Nations they convers'd with: But it does not appear to me, that Moses establish'd it as a Sanction to the Religion which he reveal'd, or that it was any Part of the Jewish Religion to believe it.

But admitting that Zoroaster took the best Parts of his Religion from the Jews, I think it is much plainer that the Romanists have taken the worst Parts of theirs from him; or else they have very luckily or unluckily jump'd in the same Thoughts. Their Archimagus, High-Priest, or Pope, they can have no where else, unless they borrow'd him from the Jews, which would be extremely impudent, since the Christian Religion is built upon the Ruins of theirs. Their Superintendents, whom they call Archbishops and Bishops, and their Parochial Priests, whom they do not borrow from the Jews, and who, they say, are not derived from human Institution, cannot be derived, in my Opinion, from from any other Source than that of Zoroaster. Where else do they find the Division of their Priests into several Orders, which exactly resemble his, namely, the lower Order in Parochial Temples, to read Offices out of their Liturgies, or Mass-Books, and Portions of their sacred Writings at appointed Times? For the Jews had not that Oeconomy, nor indeed any Synagogue-Worship, till long after Zoroaster's Time. Where else do they find Cathedrals with Altars in them, and lighted Candles upon these Altars, in Imitation of the sacred Fire of the Magi; and these Altars standing to the East, and the Worship in them perform'd with the Face towards it? Where else the many inferior Priests officiating in such Temples, subordinate to the Superintendent, and in Ease to him? And where else the endowing these Temples with Lands and Revenues?

Where do they find their uninterrupted Succession, &c. and in Consequence their Inalienable Character, but in the Succession of Zoroaster's Priests in one Tribe only, who without doubt were all Holy, had all a Divine Right, were particularly Favourites of the Divine Being, and cloathed with peculiar Powers and Dispensations? Where had they the absurd and blasphemous Opinion of God's being more immediately at the Altar, or in the East, than in any other Place, unless from the Notion and Dreams of the Magi, that the Divine Presence was in an especial Manner in the Sun, or in the Fire? Where do they find that the Deity is pleas'd with Men's retiring retiring into Caves, Corners, and Monasteries; with their neglecting the Affairs of the World, and of their Families; with their being useless to Society; and with their dwelling only upon Meditations and the Spleen; but in the Example and Authority of Zoroaster? Where do they find any Command for wild Jaunts in Pilgrimage to the Holy Land, and for idle and enthusiastick Devotions to Shrines, Altars, and Chapels, unless in the Injunctions of this Impostor to all his Votaries to visit the Temple of Balch? And where else did they adopt the absurd, monstrous, and wicked Hypothesis, of the Church's having a different Head from the State, and of the Independence of the Priests upon the Civil Power?

Most of these Opinions and Practices are Parts of the Religion of the ancient Magi; and from thence it is reasonable to presume the Romish Priests have copied them, unless they can shew where else they had them. They cannot, with the Appearance of common Sense, be deduced from the New Testament; and the Jewish Religion has been long since abolish'd. They have therefore the Honour of having restored the old Superstition of the Magi, with this material Difference, That the latter had more Learning, and much more Integrity; that they did not do, by the hundredth Part, so much Mischief, and treated with more Humanity those who differed from them.

I am, &c.

S I R,

IN my 26th Paper, which treats about the Use of Words, I have promis'd to shew how absurd and impious it is for Men to fall together by the Ears upon the Account of their Difference in Trifles, when they scarce agree in any one Thing in the World, and not even in the Attributes annex'd to the Object of all Worship, though they know nothing of him but from his Attributes; and I will now perform the Task I have there undertaken.

There is no Proposition about which Mankind have agreed and disagreed so much, as about the Meaning of the Word God. I think, very few Instances excepted, they have all agreed there is such a Being; and yet I apprehend, that no two Nations, two Sects, or scarce two Men of the same Sect, have essentially agreed in all the Ideas they have annex'd to the Sound. All have asserted, That he has existed from all Eternity, and must for ever exist, and that he has made or produced every Thing else: And thus far Heathens and Jews, Mahometans and Christians, Protestants and Papists, Deists and Free-thinkers, Materialists and Immaterialists, Stoicks, Peripateticks, and Epicureans, are all Orthodox; for the last could not have doubted but but some Being must have existed before the fortuitous Concourse of Atoms ; and in this Sense there are very few, if there is one Atheist in the World : But when they go farther, and explain what they mean by the Sound, I doubt most, or many of them, are Atheists to one another, as not believing in the Being which the one and the other call God.

All the Differences amongst Mankind, as to their Belief of the Deity, are owing to their different Conceptions of him ; and as they disagree in his Attributes, and the Modes of his Operations, and worship him under various Images and Representations. As to his Substance, Essence, the Manner or Sensorium of his Existence, we neither know, nor can know any thing, nor can have any Conception about it, and consequently can believe nothing concerning it ; and therefore all that we can believe (besides what I above said every Man agrees in) is concerning his Attributes, and the Modus wherein he has communicated or represented himself to us, that is, we can only believe in the Ideas we have annex'd in our Minds to the Word God ; and if we annex different Images to the Word, we are of a different Religion, or rather are Atheists to one another, though we call the Object of all our Worship by the same Name : For since, as I have said, we can only worship our own Conceptions or Images of the Deity, or (by new placing the Words) the Deity under our Conceptions and Images, if those Images are false, we worship only an Idol of our own Imaginations, and pay Divine
Homage

Homage to nothing; for what is the Difference to us in saying, that another Man believes in nothing, or believes in what we know to be nothing, which is Atheism. From hence I think it appears, that no Man has a Right to call another Atheist, in any other Sense, than as I shall make it appear, that most Men have a Right to call those, who differ from themselves in their Conception of the Deity, Atheists.

Now, Sir, to begin with the Heathens, who worship'd Jupiter, Mars, Venus, Mercury, &c. which were only bare Sounds and Non-entities: Their paying Divine Honours to nothing, was worshiping nothing; and believing in nothing, is the same thing in Substance as having no Belief; and therefore they were certainly Atheists, though they did not know themselves to be so. For what is Atheism, but not believing in a God? And can any Man be said to believe in a God, whose whole Belief is in an imaginary Being that is not God, though I confess such a fancied Belief may influence his Actions, and answer many of the Purposes of Society? It was the same thing when they believ'd in real Beings, as Images, Stocks, Stones, Monkeys, Garlick, &c. For they worshipp'd them for Powers which they suppos'd were in them, and which were not; and so worshipp'd those supposed Powers, and consequently worshipp'd nothing, and believ'd in nothing which was God, and consequently were Atheists in Fact, though devout Religionists in Shew, and in their own Opinion too.

But

But without annihilating the Heathen Deities, the Stoicks and Epicureans, (who differ'd much in the same Manner, as some of the Deists and Orthodox do amongst us,) were Atheists to one another, as not believing in the Attributes that each annex'd to their different Divinities. The Stoicks annexed the Attributes of Wisdom, Mercy, and Justice, to the Being of the Deity, who was suppos'd by them to dispence those Attributes occasionally to the Actions and Necessities of Men. The Epicureans thought the Deity to be sufficient in his own Felicity, and that he did not concern himself with our Affairs here below; but that all Things depended upon Fate, and an eternal Cause, which controuled and was superior to even Jupiter himself; which Fate must have been their eternal God, which produceth all Things at first.

They had no Notion of what was meant by wise, merciful, and just, when applied to the Deity; and thought they could not be analogous to what was meant by the same Words in Men; for they said, That Wisdom in Men, was only ballancing the Motives of doing or not doing an Action, and chusing which was best; which Wisdom was a Knowledge acquired by Habit and Experience, and by observing the Relations of Things to one another, and was convey'd to them through the Organs of Sense; but they said, That the Deity had no Organs, but saw all Things intuitively from all Eternity, and could not err: So they said, That Mercy in Men was a Passion caused by the Feeling or Appre-

Apprehension of the Sufferings of others ; but they believ'd that the Divinity could have no Passions, because no Agent could operate upon him, he himself being eternal, and before all Things, and producing all Things ; nor could suffer temporary Anguish and Uneasiness, always produced by Compassion. In like Manner, they said, that Justice was an Adherence to certain Rules, dictated by superior Powers, or agreed upon by Men for their mutual Convenience ; but no Rules could be set to the Divinity, who the Stoicks confess'd had made every Thing, and had a Right to do what he pleas'd with his own Creatures. He that made the Relation of all Things, might alter that Relation, and dispense with his own Laws, when and how he thought fit.

Therefore they said, when those Attributes were applied to the Deity, nothing could be meant by them, but to express our Reverence for him ; our Admiration of his Power, and to sacrifice to him our best Conceptions ; not that we pretend to define his Essence, nor the Modus of his Actions, which are wholly incomprehensible to us. They concluded that he that had done all Things could do all Things ; but did not pretend to know how he did them ; but thought themselves very sure that he did not do them as we do, viz. by weighing the Difficulties on each Side the Question, because nothing could be difficult to him ; nor could he deliberate, because Deliberation would imply Doubt ; and the Deity could not doubt, being necessitated by the

the Excellence of his Nature always to do the best.

They thought, that a Being that could never have any Causes before it, nor without it, or after it, but what it produced, nor any Objects to work upon it, must have been always uniform and entire, that is, its Attributes, its Will, and its Actions, must have been one with its Essence. It must have been constantly moving, or acting, or, as late Divines very elegantly express themselves, eternally proceeding: For there could be no Beginning of Action, without being at rest before; and then they said it must have been from all Eternity at rest, as finding it difficult to conceive, that a Being that had Self-Motion should never have exerted that Principle till a particular Period of Time, and in a particular Portion of Space, when Eternity and Infinity (its inseparable Attributes) can have no Periods and Limits; nor can any Intervals of Time and Space measure such a Being.

Hence Philosophers have called Eternity a Nunc Stans, or an Instant, or Punctum, which cannot be divided even in Imagination; and though they could not convey any distinct Images by that Way of speaking, yet they found themselves reduc'd to it from the Difficulties which would arise in dividing the Operations of a Being in all Respects indivisible. Now can any one say that these Sects believe in God? Certainly the Object of the Belief of one of them was not God, but only an Idol of their own Brains, and confe-

consequently that Sect believ'd in nothing, and were Atheists.

The same Observations runs through the different Sects of Religionists in the World, and great Numbers of particular Men in every Sect of Religion. Some represent the Deity as a capricious, angry, revengeful Being, fond of Commendation and Flattery, prescribing and dictating partial Rules to his Creatures, laying useless Burdens upon them, and making their future Happiness to depend upon the Actions of others, and upon such Performances, and believing such Speculations, as are out of their Power; others think the Deity has Satiety of Happiness within itself, and must be incapable of any Passions to interrupt that Happiness; and therefore, as we cannot do Good or Harm to him, the only Way to recommend our selves to him, is to do Good to one another. These cannot apprehend, that any Man's future Felicity lies in another's Power; or, that useless Speculations or Actions, as Bows, Cringes, Forms, Grinaces, Rotes of Words, or any Thing but a good Conscience, and a virtuous Life, can make us acceptable to the Deity. Now 'tis certain there are great Numbers of Men in the World of both these Opinions, and they undoubtedly do not believe in the same Being; but some of them believe in a Non-entirety, and consequently are Atheists.

If this Argument was to be traced through all its Sub-divisions, it would fill a Volume instead of a single Paper; and therefore I shall tire you no farther upon the Subject;
my

my Design in entring upon it being to warn my Countrymen how cautious they ought to be in calling odious Names, which may with equal Justice be retorted upon themselves; and therefore let us leave such Appellations to those who Scold for Hire, and rest fully assured, that as most certainly there is a God, so he is the best Being in the Universe; that he expects no more from us than he has given us Means to perform; and when we have done all in our Power to please him, that we shall please him, however, or how much soever we mistake his Being or Attributes, and then it will be of very little Consequence whom else we please.

I am, &c.

S I R,

AS I have with a Success which no Man has yet met with (if I regard the Number of my Readers, and the Sale of these Papers) carried on a Weekly Performance, under this and another Title*, for near four Years; in doing which, it was impossible I could have any other View but the Good of my Country and of Mankind; by shewing them the Advantage and the Beauty of Civil and Ecclesiastical Liberty, and the odious Deformity of Priestcraft and Tyranny: As I have vindicated Almighty God, and

and the Religion which he has taught us, from the Superstition, Follies, and Wickedness of Men, who would prostitute it to Ambition and Avarice, and build a visionary Empire upon the plain and simple Precepts of Christianity; and have endeavour'd to remove all the Rubbish, Grimace, and Pageantry, with which it has been long stifled and oppress'd, by shewing to the World, and I think proving, that true Piety consists only in honouring the Deity, and in doing good to Men, and not in Postures, Cringes, and canting Terms, and in barren and useless Speculations: As I think I have unanswerably shewn that Civil Governments were instituted by Men, and for the sake of Men, and not for the Pride and Lust of Governors; and consequently that Men have a Right to expect from them Protection and Liberty, and to oppose Rapine and Tyranny wherever they are exercis'd, and have thereby vindicated our present Establishment, which can pretend to no other Title.

As I have done all this openly, and in the Face of the World, and have defied and call'd upon all the merciless and detestable Advocates for Superstition and Slavery, to shew that I have transgress'd the Rules of Morality or Religion, or the Peace and Happiness of Society in any Respect; and no one has yet dared to enter the Lists against me; from whence I may reasonably hope that I have removed many of the Prejudices imbib'd by Education and Custom, and set many of my Countrymen free from the wild, wicked, and servile Notions, strongly infus'd and planted in their Minds by Craft and Delusion. — I shall now with Cheerfulness lay down this Paper, which I am well informed will be continued by an able Hand, under another Name, and upon various Subjects; and it is probable that I may so far join in the Undertaking, as to give my Assistance now and then, when proper Occasions require it; at least, I am not determin'd not to do so.

There are some Papers, especially those sign'd Diogenes, which have given an undesigned Offence to some, whose Persons I honour, and whose Opinions I reverence. For I have no Regard to the Persons, and narrow Notions of Bigots, who will renounce any Opinion as soon as it appears to be rational, and would rather make Nonsense of it, than not make it a Mystery. It is a Principle become constitutional to me, that God gave us our Understandings to use them, and that we cannot offend him in carrying them as far as they will carry us. However, as the principal Question handled in those Papers is a Matter of meer Speculation, understood but by few, and to be understood but by few; the Belief or Disbelief of it, can no Way affect human Society; and whether it be true or not, the Actions of Men will be the same, and Men will be alike actuated by the Motives that operate upon them, and equally pursue what they take to be their Advantage upon the whole, at the Time, and in the Circumstances they are then in, whether they are oblig'd to do so, or chuse to do so, without being necessitated to that Choice.

What led me into this Thought, is the Observation which runs almost through the World, that the Bulk of Mankind in all Ages, and in all Countries, are violently attach'd to the Opinions, Customs, and even Habits, which they have been us'd to; that Sounds, Shews, Prejudices, vain and idle Terrors, Phantoms, Delusions, and sometimes Diet and Physick, are more prevalent with them, and operate more upon them than true and strong Reasons; and that all Animals of the same Species act in the same Manner, and have the same Passions, Sensations and Affections, with very little Alterations: All which I could not account for, but by supposing those Operations to be mechanical, and the Results of their several Constitutions, as they were altered and modified by Habit, and by different Occasions or Motives of making use of them, which acted upon them.

For the rest, I saw, with a sensible Concern, the many Mischiefs which the Leaders and Deceivers of Parties and Factions in Religion did to the World, by throwing God's Judgments at one another, and by impiously confining his Providence and Mercies to themselves, and by applying the common Phenomena and Events of Nature to their own Advantage, and interpreting the same as Denunciations of his Wrath against their Enemies; by which unhallowed Presumption they have rais'd up and inflam'd implacable Hatred,

Hatred, Animosities and Uncharitableness amongst Men of the same Nation, who are all Brethren. - I have therefore shewn, that the Almighty dispenses his Favours to all his Creatures ; that his Sun shines upon the Just, and upon the Unjust ; and that it is the highest and most daring Boldness in any sort of Men to search into, and to pretend to unriddle the secret Dispensations of his Providence ; to know his Mind before he unfolds it ; to throw about such Balls of Contention and Wrath ; and to make the Condition of Men, already too miserable by the Lot of Nature, still more miserable.

I saw the many Evils and barbarous Consequences arising from the idle and foolish Stories of Witches, Spirits, and Apparitions; first infused into our tender Minds by Nurses, Chamber-Maids, and old Women, and afterwards continu'd and improv'd by Tutors and Priests; which Impressions and Stories the wisest and bravest Men often carry about them to their Graves, and which make them always uneasy till they go thither; in-somuch, that Numbers of People dare not be alone, nor go about their necessary Affairs in the Night-time; but are kept in constant Dread of Phantoms and Non-entities; and Multitudes of Innocents have been murdered under the Appearance of Justice upon Satan's Confederates. I have therefore shewn, that there is no Foundation in Nature, in Reason, or in Religion, for these Fairy Tales; that they are inconsistent with the Mercies, and even with the Being, of the great and good

God ;

God ; and that the telling or believing of these Tales, is endeavouring to give an Empire to the Devil at the Expence of the Almighty.

It is certain, that the Capacities of Men would carry them much further than they are suffer'd to go, if they were not cramp'd by Custom and narrow Education, and narrow Principles taken from those who design and derive Advantages from their Ignorance. I have therefore lamented to see Men of large and extensive Genius, such as seem'd design'd by Nature to carry human Knowledge many Degrees further than it has yet gone, and to manumit their Country and Mankind from the servile and wicked Notions infus'd into them by prating Pedants and babling Impostors ; I say, I have lamented to see such extensive Capacities employ'd and conversant only about Whims, idle Speculations, empty Notions, Fairy-Dreams, and Party-Distinctions, all tending to contract and imbitter the Mind, to stifle and oppress the Faculties, and to render Men Dupes and Machines to the Ambition, Pride, and Avarice, of selfish and haughty Ecclesiasticks, or of corrupt Statesmen. Nor can I see how this great Evil can ever be cured, till we change the Education of our Youth ; and let Gentlemen be bred by Gentlemen, and not by Monks and Pedants, whom yet I would suffer to dream on with their Bellies full of College-Ale, and their Heads full of College-Distinctions ; but I think they ought not to be trusted with the Educa-

Education of our Nobility and Gentry, till they have some themselves.

And now I beg Leave again to repeat, that it was impossible I could engage in this Undertaking so troublesome to my self, and I hope of some Benefit to my Countrymen, with any View to my own personal Advantage. I hope no one will think so meanly of my Understanding, to believe that I intended to make my Court to any of the Powers of this World, by attacking Vice, Corruption and Folly, wheresoever and in whomsoever they were found. I knew that I was to walk over burning Plough-Shares; that I must provoke numerous and powerful Societies and Parties; that I must disturb Nests of Hornets, and sometimes venture too near the Lion's Den, and perhaps within the reach of Jove's Thunder; that Men in Possession of Reverence would not bear being told, that they did not deserve it; that those who rioted in Power, and upon the publick Misfortune, would very unwillingly hear, that they were trusted with that Power for the publick Advantage, and not for their own; that they were oblig'd by all the Motives of Honour, Virtue, and Religion, to serve and protect the People, out of whose Industry and Wealth they were so highly Rewarded; and that they deserved the severest Punishment if they did otherwise. I had all this before my Eyes: But arm'd with Innocence, and animated by Love to God and Mankind, I resolv'd to brave the Danger, and was prepared for the worst that could happen to my self, if I could but serve my Country. And I have brav'd the Danger, and have now the Pleasure to see great Numbers of my Fellow-Subjects approve my Endeavours, and embrace my Opinions. I therefore here lay down this Paper, and with it the most virtuous and noble Subject that can employ the human Soul ; the Subject of Religion and Government. What remains to be done, I leave to others, and wish them Success. I rejoice in the Assurance I have, that my * Successor will give equal Satisfaction to the Town. I am, Sir, to you and all my Readers,

A most sincere humble Servant,

C A T O.
